

MORE UTOPIA

1624

4448 / B

64135
SIR THOMAS MOORE'S

UTOPIA:

CONTAINING,
AN EXCELLENT, LEARNED, WITTIE, AND PLEASANT Discourse of the best state of a Publike Weale, as it is found in the Gouvernment of the new Ile called Utopia.

FIRST WRITTEN IN LATINE, by the Right Honourable and worthy of all Fame, SIR THOMAS MOORE, Knight, Lord Chau- cellour of England; And translated into English by RADHEE ROBINSON, sometime Fellow of Corpus Christi Colledge in Oxford.

And now after many Impressions, newly Corrected and purged of all Errors hapned in the former Editions.

LONDON,
Printed by Bernard Alsop, dwelling in Distaffe lane at the Signe of the Dolphin.

1624.

W. T. O. P. I. A. :

CONTAINING
THE HISTORY OF THE LIFE OF THE LATE

JOHN WILKINSON
ESQ.

BY
J. WILKINSON

IN TWO VOLUMES

LONDON
Printed by J. WILKINSON in the Strand

1781

THE

WILKINSON

1781

TO THE HONOVABLE descended Gentleman CRESACRE MORE, of More-place in North-Mimes, in the Countie of Hertford, Esquire ; next in Bloud to Sir THOMAS MORE, Lord Chauncellour of England, and Heire to the auncient Familie of the Cresacres, sometime Lords of the Mannor of Bamorough, in the Countie of Yorke, in the time of Edward the first.

Owfoeuer (in these wretched daies) the Dedication of Bookes is growne into a wretched respect; Because the Inducements looke a wrie, sometimes from vertue, pointing at ostentation (which is grosse,) or at flatterie (which is more base,) or else at gaine, which is the most sordid of all other : yet (worthy Sir) I beseech you be pleased better to conceine of this present ; for the Inducements which haue drawne me to this boldnesse, cary (I might say a Noble, but I dare be bold to say) an honest countenance : to omit the excellencie of the Worke (yet vnpara-leld in that nature) or the noble parts of the more excellent Authour (whose remembrance is a myrror to all succeeding Nobilitie) both which might challenge Cæsar for a Patron : yet when I looke into your Honourable Pedegree, and finde you the vndoubted heire of his Bloud, me thought it was a theft

The Epistle Dedicatorie theft of the worst nature, to giue to another the inheritance of his vertue, and I might as well take from you the Lands of the Honourable and auncient Family of Cresacre (With which God and your right hath endowed you) as bestow vpon a stranger this glorious Common-wealth, to which your owne Bloud, your Auncestours vertue, and my dutie must necessarily intaile you: This consideration, when you please to take to your memory, I doubt not but it will much lessen my presumption, and you will out of the goodnesse of your owne vertue thinke, since it is my fortune to bestow vpon him the new Edition, I could not With good manners) but bring him to kisse the hand of his true owner, Wishing that as this Booke is eternall for the vertue, and shall liue whilest any Booke hath being: so your name and goodnesse may continue amongst vs, euer flourishing and unwithered, so long as the Sunne and Moone endureth:

Your' Worships euer to be commanded,

BERNARD ALSOP.

Thomas Moore to Peter Giles, sendeth Greeting.

Am almost ashamed, right well-beloued Peter Giles, to send vnto you this Booke of the Vtopian Common-wealth, wel nigh after a yeares space, which I am sure you looked for within a month and a halfe. And no maruell. For you knew well enough, that I was already disburthened of all the labour and study belonging to the inuention in this worke, and that I had no neede at all to trouble my braines about the disposition, or conueyance of the matter: and therefore had herein nothing else to do, but only to rehearse those things which you and I together heard Master Raphael tell and declare. Wherefore there was no cause why I should study to set forth the matter with eloquence: forasmuch as his talke could not be fine and eloquent, being first not studied for, but sudden and vnpremeditate: and then as you know of a man better scene in the Greeke Language, then in the Latine tongue. And my Trush loweth writing, the nigher it should approach to his homely, plaine, and simple speech, so much the nigher should it goe to the truth: which is the plaine se. only marke, whereunto I doe and ought to distrust all my trauell and study herein, I grant and confesse, frie id Peter, my selfe discharged of so much labour, hauing all these things done to my hand, that almost there was nothing for me to doe. Else either the inuention, or the disposition of this matter, might haue required of a wit neither base, neither at all vnlearned, both some time and leisure, and also some studie. But if it were requisite, and necessary, that the matter should also haue bene written eloquently, and not alone truly: of a suertie that thing could I haue performed by no time nor studie. But now seeing all these cares, staies and lets, were taken away, wherein else so much labour and studie should haue bene employed, and that there remained no other thing for me to doe, but only to write plainly the matter as I heard it spoken: that indeed was a thing light and easie to be done. Howbeit to the dispatching of this so little businesse, my other cares and troubles did leaue almost lesse, then no leisure. Whiles I doe daily bestow my time about law matters: some to pleade, some to heare, some as an arbitratour with mine award to determine: some as an vmpire or a Iudge, with my sentence finally to discusse. Whiles I goe one way to see and visit my friend: another way about mine owne priuate affaires. Whiles I spend almost all the day abroad among other, and the residue at home among mine owne: I leaue to my selfe, I meane to my booke, no time. For when I am come home, I must commune with my wife, chat with my children, and talke with my seruants. All the which things I reckon and account among businesse, forasmuch as they must

The author's businesse and letters.

The Epistle.

of necessitie be done : and done must they needes be, vnlesse a man will be a stranger in his owne house. And in any wise a man must so fashion and order his conditions, and so appoint and dispose himselfe, that he be merie, iocund and pleasant among them, whom either nature hath provided, or chance hath made, or he himselfe hath chosen to be the fellowes and companions of his life : so that with too much gentle behatiour and familiaritie, he doe not marre them, and by too much sufferance of his seruants, make them his masters. Among these things now rehearsed, stealeth away the day, the moneth, the yeare.

When doe I write then ? And all this while haue I spoken no word of sleepe, neither yet of meat, which among a great number doth waste no lesse time, then doth sleepe, wherein almost halfe the life time of man creepeth away. I therefore doe winne and get only that time, which I steale from sleepe and meat. Which time because it is very little, and yet somewhat it is : therefore haue I once at the last, though it be long first, finished Propia, and haue sent it to you, friend Peter, to reade and peruse : to the intent that if any thing haue escaped me you might put me in remembrance of it. For though in this behalfe I doe not greatly mistrust my selfe (which would God I were somewhat in wit and learning, as I am not all of the worst and dullest memorie) yet haue I not so great trust and confidence in it, that I thinke nothing could fall out of my minde. For Iohn Clement my boy, who as you know was there present with vs, whom I suffered to be away from no talke, wherein may be any profit or goodnesse (for out of this new bladed and shor vp corn, which hath already begun to spring vp, both in Latine and Greeke learning, I looke for plentifull encrease at length of goodly ripe graine) he I say, hath brought me into a great doubt. For whereas Hyrbloday (vnlesse my memory faile me) said that the Bridge of Amavroite, which goeth ouer the Riuer of Anyder, is five hundred paces : that is to say, halfe a mile in length : my Iohn saith, that two hundred of those paces must be plucked away, for that the Riuer containeth there not above three hundred paces in breadth. I pray you heartily call the matter to your remembrance. For if you agree with him, I also will say as you say, and confesse my selfe deceiued. But if you cannot remember the thing, then surely I will write as I haue done, and as mine owne remembrance serueth me. For as I will take good heed, that there be in my booke nothing false, so if there be anything doubtful, I will rather tell a lye, then make a lye : because I had rather be good, then wily. Howbeit this matter may easily be remedied, if you will take the pains to aske the question of Raphael himselfe by word of mouth, if he be now with you, or else by your letters. Which you must needes doe for another doubt also, that hath chanced, through whose fault I cannot tell : whether through mine, or yours, or *Raphael*s. For neither we remembered to enquire of him, or he to tell vs in what part of the new world Propia is situate. The which thing, I had rather haue spent no small summe of money, then that it should thus haue escaped vs : as well for that I am ashamed to be ignorant in what sea that Island standeth, whereof

Meat and sleepe great masters of time.

A diuersitie betweene making a lye, and telling a lye.

*In what part of the world Pro-pia standeth, it is unknowne.*

The Epistle.

whereof I write so long a Treatise, as also because there be with vs certaine men, especially one vertuous and godly man, and a professor of It is thought of Diuinitie, who is exceeding desirous to goe into Utopia: not for a vaine some that here and curious desire to see newes, but to the intent he may further and in- *is vnfaignedly*crease our Religion, which is there already luckely begun. And that meant the late he may the better accomplish and performe this his good intent, he is famous Vicar of minded to procure that he may be sent thither by the high Bishop: yea, *Creyden in Sur-*and that he himselfe be made Bishop of Utopia, being nothing scrupulous rey. herein, that he must obaine this Bishopricke with suit, which proceedeth not of the desire of honour or lucre, but onely of a godly zeale. Wherefore I most earnestly desire you, friend Peter, to talke with Hyth- today, if you can, face to face, or else to write your letters to him, and so to worke in this matter, that in this my booke there may neither any thing be found, which is vntrue, neither any thing be lacking, which is true. And I thincke verily it shall be well done, that you shew vnto him the booke it selfe. For if I haue missed or failed in any point, or if any fault haue escaped me, no man can so well correct and amend it, as hee can: and yet that can he not doe, vnlesse he peruse, and reade ouer my booke written: Moreouer, by this means shall you perceiue, whether he be well willing & content, that I should vndertake to put this worke in writiug. For if he be minded to publish and put forth his owne labours and trauailes himselfe, perchance he would be loth, and so would I also, that in publishing the Utopian weale publike, I should preuent him, and take him from the flower and grace of the noueltie of this his historie. Howbeit, to say the verie trueth, I am not yet fully determined with my selfe, whether I will put forth my booke or no. For the natures of men be so diuers, the fantasies of some so wayward, their minds The vnkinde so vnkinde, their iudgements so corrupt that they which leade a merie iudgements of and a iocund life, following their owne sensuall pleasures and carnall men. lusts, may seem to be in a much better state or case, then they that vex & vnquiet themselues with cares & studie, for the putting forth and publishing of som thing, that may be either profit or pleasure to others: which others neuertheless will disdainefully, scornfully, and vakinly accept the same. The most part of all bee vnlearned. And a great number hath learning in contempt. The rude and barbarous alloweth nothing, but that which is very barbarous indeede. If it be one that hath a litle smacke of learning, he reiecteth as homely geare and common ware, whatsoever is not stuffed full of old motheaten tearmes, and that becomne out of vse. Some there be that haue pleasure onely in old rustie antiquities. And some onely in their owne doings. One is so sower, so crabbed, and so vnpleasant, that hee can away with no mirth nor sport. Another is so narrow betweene the shoulders, that he can beare no iests nor taunts. Some silly poore soules be so afraid, that at every snapish word, their nose shall be bitten off, that they stand in no lesse dread of euery quicke and sharpe word, then he that is bitten of a mad dogge feareth water. Some be so mutable and wauering, that euery houre they be in a new minde, saying one thing sitting, and another thing standing.

The Epistle.

ding. Another sort sitteth vpon their Ale benches, and there among their cups they give iudgement of the wits of writers, and with great authoritie they condemne euen as pleaseth them, euery writer according to his writing, in most spightfull maner, mocking, lowling and flouting them: being themselves in the meane season safe, and as saith the Proverbe, out of all danger of gun-shot. For why, they be so smugge and so smooth, that they haue not so much as one heart of an honest man, whereby one may take hold of them. There be moreouer some so vnkinde, and vngentle, that though they take great pleasure and delectation in the worke, yet for all that, they can not finde in their hearts to loue the Author thereof, nor afford him a good word, being much like vncourteous, vnthankfull, and churlish guests, which when they haue with good and daintie meates well filled their bellies, depart home, giuing no thanks to the feast-maker. Go your waies now, and make a costly feast at your owne charges for guests, so daintie moured so diuers in taste, and besides that of so vnkinde and vnthankfull natures. But neuertheless (friend Peter) doe, I pray you with Mysbloday, as I willed you before. And as for this matter I shall be at my libertie, afterwards to take new aduisement. Howbeit, seeing I haue taken great paines and labour in writing the manner, if it may stand with his minde and pleasure, I will as touching the Edition or publishing of the Booke, follow the counsell and aduise of my friends, and specially yours. Thus farre you well right heartily, beloved friend Peter, with your gentle wife: and loue me as you haue euer done, for I loue you better then euer

I did.

*A fit simile.
rude.*

THE

THE
FIRST BOOKE
OF THE COMMVNICATION Of RAPHAEL HYTHLODAY, concerning the best State of a COMMON-WEALTH.

HE most victorious and triumphant King of England, Henry the eight of that name, in all royall vertues, a Prince most peerelesse, had of late in controuersie with Charles, the right high and mightie King of Castile, weightie matters, and of great importance. For the debatement and finall determination whereof, the Kings Maiestie sent me Ambassadour into Flaunders, ioyned in commission with Cuthbert Tunstall, a man doubtlesse out of comparison, Cuthbert Tunstall and whom the Kings Maiestie of late, to the great reioysing of all men, did preferre to the Office of Master of the Rolles.

But of this mans praises I will say nothing, not because I doe feare that small credence shall be given to the testitimonie that commeth out of a friends mouth : but because his vertue and learning be greater, and of more ex-cellencie, then that I am able to praise them : and also in all places so famous and so perfectly wel known, that they neede not, nor ought not of me to be praised, vnlesse I would seeme to shew and set forth the brightnesse of the Sunne with a Candle, as the Prouerbe saith. There met vs at Bruges (for thus it was before agreed) they whom their Prince had for that matter appointed Commissioners : excellent men all. The chiefe and the head of them was the Maregraue (as they call him) of Bruges, a right honorable man: but the wisest and the best spoken of them was George Temsice, prouost of Casselles, a man, not only by learning, but also by nature, of singuler eloquence, and in the lawes profoundly learned : but in reasoning and debating of matters, what by his naturall wit, and what by daily exercise, surely he had few fellows. After that we had once or twise met, and vpon certaine points or articles could not fully and throughly agree, they for a certaine space tooke their leaue of vs, and departed to Bruxelle, there to know their Princes pleasure. I in the meane time (for so my businesse lay) went straight thence to Antwerpe. Whiles I was there abiding, oftentimes among other, but which to me was more welcome then any other, did visit me one Peter Giles, a Citizen of Antwerpe, a man there in his Countrey of honest reputation, and also preferred to high promotions, worthy truly of the highest. For it is hard to say, whether the yong man be in learning, or in honestie more excellent. For he is both of wonderfull vertuous conditions, and also singularly well learned, and towards all sorts of people exceeding gentle : But towards his friends so kind-hearted, so louing, so faithfull, so trustie, and of so earnest affection, that it were very hard in any place to finde a man, that with him in all points of friendship may be compared.

 No man can be more lowly or courteous ; no man vseth lesse simulation, or dissimulation, in no man is more prudent

Peter Giles.

dent simplicitie. Besides this, he is in his talke and communication so merry and pleasant, yea and that without harme, that through his gentle entertainment, and his sweete and delectable communication, in me was greatly abated and diminished the feruent desire that I had to see my natie Countrie, my wife and my children, whom then I did much long and couet to see : because that at that time I had bene more then foure moneths from them. Vpon a certaine day when I had heard the Diuine Seruice in our Ladies Church, which is the fayrest, the most gorgious and curious Church of building in all the Citie, and also most frequented of people, and the Seruice being done, was ready to goe home to my lodging, I chaunced to espy this foresaid Peter talking with a capitaine, Stranger, a man well stricken in age, with a blacke sunne-burned face, a long beard, and a cloake cast homely about his shoulders, whom by his fauour and apparell forthwith I iudged to be a Mariner. But the said Peter seeing me, came vnto me and saluted me. And as I was about to answer him : see you this man, saith he (and therewith he pointed to the man, that I saw him talking with before) I was minded, quoth he, to bring him straight home to you. He should haue bene very welcome to me, said I, for your sake. Nay (quoth he) for his owne sake, if you knew him : for there is no man this day liuing, that can tell you of so many strange and vnknowne peoples, and Countries, as this man can. And I know well that you be very desirous to heare of such newes. Then I coniectured not farre amisse (quoth I) for euen at the first sight, I iudged him to be a Mariner. Nay (quoth he) there ye were greatly deceiued : he hath sayled indeed, not as the Mariner Palinure, but as the expert and prudent Prince Ulysses : Yea, rather as the ancient and sage Philosopher Plato. For this same Raphael Hythloday (for this is his Raphael Histoday name) he is very well learned in the Latine tongue : but profound and excellent in the Greeke language. Wherein he euer bestowed more studie then in the Latine, because he had giuen himselfe wholly to the study of Philosophy. Whercof he knew that there is nothing certaine in Latine, that is to any purpose, sauing a few of Senecaes, and Ciceroes doings. His patrimonie that he was borne vnto, he left to his brethren (for he is a Portugall borne) and for the desire he had to see, and know the farre Countries of the world, he ioyned himselfe in companie with Americke Vespuce; and in the three last voyages of those foure that be now in print, and abroad in euery mans hands, he continued still in his company, sauing that in the last voyage he came not home againe with him. For he made such means and shift, what by intreatance, and what by importune suite, that he got licence of Master Americke (though it were fore against his will) to be one of the twentie foure, which in the end of the last voyage were left in the Countrie of Gulike. He was therefore left behinde for his mind-sake, as one that tooke more thought and care for traouelling, then dying; hauing customably in his mouth these sayings: He that hath no grane, is couered with the skie; and, The way to heauen, out of all places, is of like length and distance. Which fantasie of his, (if God had not beene his better friend) he had surely bought full deere. But after the departure of Master Vespuce, when he had trauelled through and about many Countries with fise of his companions Gulikians; at the last by meruailous chance he arriued in Taprobane, from whence he went to Caliquit, where he chaunced to finde certaine of his Countrie ships, wherein he returned againe into his Countrie, nothing lesse then looked for. All this when Peter had told me, I thanked him for his gentle kindnesse: that he had vouchsafed to bring me to the speech of that man, whose communication, he thought should be to me pleasant, and acceptable. And therewith I turned me to Raphael: And when wee had halfed each other, and had spoken these commune words, that he customably spoken at the first meeting, and acquaintance of strangers, we went thence to my house, and there in my Garden, vpon a bench couered with greene turues, we fate downe talking together. There he told vs, how that after the departing of Vespere, he and his fellows that tarried behinde in Gulicke, began by little and little, through fayre and gentle speech, to winne the loue and fauour of the people of that Countrey; insomuch that within short space, they did dwell among them, not onely harmelesse, but also occupying with them familiarly. He told vs also, that they were in high reputation and fauour with a certaine Great man (whose name and Countrey is now quite out of my remembrance) which of his meere liberalitie, did beare the costs and charges of him and his five companions. And besides that, gaue them a trustie guide to conduct them in their iourney (which by water was in Boats, and by land in Wagons), and to bring them to other Princes with very friendly commendations.

in

Thus after many dayes iournies, he said, they found Townes, and Cities, and Weale publiques, full of people, gouerned by good and holosome Lawes: For vnder the line Equinoctiall, and on both sides of the same, as farre as the Sunne doth extend his course, lyeth (quoth he) great and wide Desarts, and Wildernesles, parched, burned, and dried vp with continuall and intollerable heate. All things be hideous, terrible, loathsome, and vnpleasant to behold: All things out of fashion and comelineffe, inhabited with wilde Beasts, and Serpents; or at the least-wise, with people, that be no lesse sauage, wilde, and noysome, then the very beasts themselves be. But a little farther beyond that, all things begin by little and little to waxe pleasant. The Ayre soft, temperate, and gentle: the ground couered with greene grasse: lesse wildnesse in the Beasts. At the last shall yee come to people, Cities, and Townes, wherein is continuall entercourse and occupying of merchandize and chaffare, not onely among themselves, and with their Borderers; but also with Merchants of farre Countries, both by land and water. There I had occasion (said he) to go to many Countries on euery side.

Shippes of strange fashions.

The Lode-
stone.

For there was no ship ready to any voyage or iourney, but I and my fellowes were into it very gladly receined. The ships that they found first, were made plaine, flat, and broad in the bottome trough-wise. The sayles were made of great rushes, or of wickers, & in some places of leather. Afterward they found ships with ridged kyles, and sayles of Canuasse: yea, and shortly after, hauing all things like ours. The ship-men also were expert and cunning, both in the Sea, and in the weather. But he said, that he found great fauour and friendship among them, for teaching them the feate and vse of the Lode-stone. which to them before that time was vnknowne. And therefore they were wont to be very timerous and fearefull vpon the sea: Nor to venture vpon it, but only in the Summer time. But now they haue such a confidence in that stone, that they feare not stormie Winter: in so doing, farther from care then danger. In so much, that it is greatly to be doubted, lest that thing, through their owne foolish hardinesse, shall turne them to euill and harme, which at the first was supposed should be to them good and commodious. But what he tolde vs that he saw in euery Countrie where he came, it were very long to declare. Neither is it my purpose at this time to make reherfall thereof. But peradventure in another place will I speake of it: chiefly such things as shall be profitable to be knowne: as in speciall be those decrees and ordinances, that he marked to be well and wittily prouided and enacted among such peoples, as doe liue together in a ciuill policie, and good order. For of such things did we busily enquire, and demand of him, and he likewise very willingly told vs of the same. But as for monsters, because they be no newes, of them we were nothing inquisitiue: For nothing is more easie to be found, then be barking Scillaes, rauening Celenes, and Lestrigones, deuourers of people, and such like great and incredible monsters. But to finde Citizens ruled by good and wholesome Lawes, that is an exceeding rare, and hard thing. But as he marked many fond and foolish foolish Lawes in those new-found Lands; so he rehearsed diuers acts and constitutions, whereby these our Cities, Nations, Countries, and Kingdomes, may take example to amend their faults, enormities and errors. Whereof in another place (as I said) I will intreate. Now at this time I am determined to rehearse only that he told vs of the Maners, Customes, Lawes, and Ordinances of the Tropians. But first I will respect our former communication by the occasion, and (as I might say) the drift whereof he was brought into the mention of the Weale Publique: For when Raphael had very prudently touched diuers things that be amisse, some here, and some there; yea, very many on both parts; and againe had spoken of such wise Lawes, and prudent Decrees, as be established and vsed, both here among vs, and also among them; as a man so perfect, and expert in the Lawes, and Customes of euery feuerall Countrie, as though into what place soeuer he came guest-wise, there he had led all his life: then Peter much meruailing at the man; Surely Master Raphael (quoth he) I wonder greatly, why you get you not into some Kings Court: For I am sure, there is no Prince liuing, that would not be very glad of you, as a man not only able highly to delight him with your profound learning, and this your knowledge of Countries, and peoples, but also meet to instruct him with examples, and help him with counsell. And thus doing, you shall bring your selfe in a very good case, and also be of abilitie to help all your friends and kinsfolke. As concerning my friends and kinsfolke (quoth he) I passe not greatly for them: For I thinke I haue sufficiently done my part towards them already. For these things, that other men do not depart from, vntill they be old and sicke; yea, which they be then very loath to leaue, when they can no longer keepe, those very same things did I being not onely lusty, and in good health, but also in the flowre of my youth, deuide among my friends and kinsfolkes. Which I thinke with this my liberalitie ought to hold them contented tented, and not to require nor to looke that besides this,

 I should for their sakes giue my selfe in bondage vnto Kings. Nay, God forbid that (quoth Peter) it is not my minde that you should be in bondage to Kings, but as a retainer to them at your pleasure. Which surely I thinke is the nighest way that you can deuise how to bestow your time fruitfully, not onely for the prinate commo-ditie of your friends, and for the generall profit of all sorts of people, but also for the aduancement of your selfe to a much wealthier state and condition, then you be now in. To a wealthier condition (quoth Raphael) by that meanes, that my minde standeth cleane against? Now I Hue at liberty after mine owne minde and pleasure, which I thinke very few of these great States, and Peeres of Realmes can say. Yea, and there be enough of them that Hue for great mens friendships: and therefore thinke it no great hurt, if they haue not me, nor third or fourth such other as I am. Well, I perceiue plainly friend Raphael (quoth I) that you be desirous neither of riches, nor of power. And truly I haue in no lesse reuerence and estimation a man of your minde, then any of them all that be so high in power and authoritie: But you shall doe as it becommeth you; yea, and according to this wisdom, to this high and free courage of yours, if you can finde in your heart, so to appoint and dispose your selfe, that you may apply your wit and diligence to the profit of the Weale publique, though it be somewhat to your owne paine and hinderance. And this shall you neuer so well doe, nor with so great profit performe, as if you be of some great Princes counsell, and put into his head (as I doubt not but you will) honest opinions, and vertuous perswasions: For from the Prince, as from a perpetuall well-spring, commeth among the people the fount of all that is good or euill. But in you is so perfect learning, that without any experience, and againe, so great experience that without any learning you may well be any Kings Counsellour. You be twise deceiued Master More (quoth

(quoth he) first in mee, and againe in the thing it selfe: for neither is in me the abilitie that you force vpon me, and if it were neuer so much, yet in disquieting mine owne quietnesse I should nothing further the Weale publique: For first of all, the most part of all Princes haue more delight in warlike matters, and feates of chiuallrie (the knowledge whereof I neither haue nor desire) then in the good feates of peace: and imploy much more studie, how by right or by wrong to enlarge their Dominions, then how well, and peaceably to rule, and gouerne that they haue already. Moreouer, they that be counsellors to kings, euery one of them either is of himselfe so wise indeede that he needeth not, or else he thinketh himself so wise, that he will not allow another mans counsell, sauing that they do shamefully, and flatteringly, giue assent to the fond and foolish sayings of certaine great men: whose fauours, be cause they be in high authoritie with their Prince, by assentation and flatterie they labour to obtaine. And verily it is naturally giuen to all men to esteeme their owne inuentious best: So both the Rauē and the Ape thinke their owne young ones fairest. Then if a man in such a company, where some disdaine and haue despight, at other mens inuentions, and some count their owne best; if among such men (I say) a man should bring forth any thing, that he hath read done in times past, or that he hath seen done in other places; there the hearers, fare as though the whole exultation of their wisdom were in ieopardie to be ouerthrowne, and that euer after they should be counted for very desarts, vnlesse they could in other mens inuentions picke out matter to reprehend, and finde fault at. If all other poore helps fayle: then this is their extreame refuge. These things (say they) pleased our forefathers and auncestors: would God we could be so wise as they were: and as though they had wittily concluded the matter, and with this answer stopped euery mans mouth, they sit downe againe. As who should say, it were a very dangerous matter, if a man in any point should be Trip-takers.

Parciall iudge-ment.

Cardinall
Morton.

found wiser then his fore-fathers were. And yet be we content to suffer the best and wittiest of their Decrees to lye vnexecuted : but if in any thing a better order might haue beene taken, then by them was, there we take fast hold, finding therein many faults. Many times haue I chanced vpon such proude, lewd, ouer-thwart, and wayward iudgements ; yea (and once) in England : I pray you sir (quoth I) haue you beene in our Countrie ? Yea forsooth (quoth he) and there I tarried for the space of foure or fise moneths together, not long after the insurrection that the Westerne English men made against their king, which by their owne miserable and pitifull slaughter, was suppressed and ended. In the meane season, I was much bound and beholding to the right reuerend Father, John Morton, Arch-bishop and Cardinall of Canterburie, and at that time also Lord Chauncellour of England ; a man, Master Peter (for Master More knoweth already that I will say) not more honourable for his authoritie, then for his prudence and vertue. He was of a meane stature, and though stricken in age, yet bare he his body vpright.

In his face did shine such an amiable reuerence, as was pleasant to behold. Gentle in communication, yet earnest, and sage. He had great delight many times with rough speech to his suiters, to proue, but without harme, what prompt-wit, & what bold spirit were in euery man. In the which as in a vertue much agreeing with his nature, so that therewith were not ioyned impudency, he tooke great delectation. And the same person, as apt and meet to haue an administration in the Weale publike, he did louingly embrace. In his speech he was fine, eloquent, and pithie. In the Law, he had profound knowledge ; in wit, he was incomparable ; and in memory, wonderfull excellent. These qualities, which in him were by nature singuler, he by learning and vse had made perfect. The king put much trust in his counsell, the Weale publike also in a maner leaned vnto him, when I was there : For euen in the chiefe of his youth he was taken from Schoole into the Court, and there there passed all his time in much trouble and businesse, being continually tumbled and tossed in the waues of diuers misfortunes and aduersities. And so by many and great dangers, he learned the experience of the world, which so being learned, cannot easily be forgotten. It chanced on a certaine day, when I sate at his table, there was also a certaine lay man, cunning in the Laws of your Realme: Who, I cannot tel, whereof taking occasion, began diligently and earnestly to praise that strait and rigorous iustice, which at that time was there executed vpon felonies; who as he said, were for the most part twenty hanged together vpon one gallowes. And, seeing so few escaped punishment, he said he could not choose, but greatly wonder and meruaile, how and by what euill luck it should so come to passe, that theeuers neuerthelessse were in euery place so rife and so rancke. Nay sir quoth I (for I durst boldly speake my minde, before the Cardinall) meruaile nothing hereat: for this punishment of theeuers passeth the limits of Iustice, and is also very hurtfull to the Weale publike: For it is too extream and cruell a punishment for theft, and yet not sufficient to refraine and withhold men from theft: for simple theft is not so great an offence, that it ought to be punished with death; neither there is any punishment so horrible, that it can keepe them from stealing, which haue none other craft, whereby to get their liuing. Therefore in this point, not you only, but also the most part of the world be like euil Schoolemasters, which be readier to beat, then to teach their scholers. For great & horrible punishments be appointed for theeuers, whereas much rather, provision should haue bin made, that there were some means, whereby they might get their liuing, so that no man should be driuen to this extreame necessitie, first to steale, and then to die. Yes (quoth he) this matter is well enough provided for already. There be handy-crafts; there is husbandry to get their liuing, if they would not willingly be nought. Nay, quoth I, you shall not scape so: for first of all, I will speake nothing of them, that come home out of the wars,

Of lawes not made according to equi-tie.

N.B.
By whae meanes there might be fewer theeuers and robbers.

Punishment of death for stealing, too severe, and impolitic.

Idlenesse, the mother of theeues.

Landlords by the way checked for Rent raising.

Of Idle ser-uingmen come theeues.

Landlords, high rents, and idle followers.

mained and lame, as not long agoe; out of Blacke-heath field, and a little before that, out of the warres in France: such I say, as put their liues in ieopardie for the Weale publicques, or the Kings sake, and by reason of weaknesse and lamenesse be not able to occupy their old crafts, and be to aged to learne new: of them I will speake nothing, forasmuch as warres haue their ordinary recourse. But let vs consider those things that chance daily before our eyes. First there is a great number of Gentlemen, which cannot be content, to liue idle themselves, like dorrers, of that which other haue laboured for: their tenants I meane, whom they poll and shauo to the quicke, by raising their rents (for this onely point of frugalitie doe they vse, men else through their lauasse and prodigall spending, able to bring themselves to very beggerie) these Gentlemen, I say, doe not onely liue in idlenesse themselves, but also carry about with them at their tails, a great flocke or traine of idle and loitering Seruing-men, which neuer learned any craft, whereby to get their liuings. These men as soone as their Master is dead, or be sicke themselves, be incontinent thrust out of dores: for Gentlemen had rather keepe idle persons, then sicke men, and many times the dead mans heire is not able to maintain so great a house, and keepe so many Seruing-men as his father did. Then in the meane season, they that be thus destitute of seruice, either starue for hunger, or manfully play the theeues: For what would you haue them to doe? When they haue wandred abroad so long, untill they haue worne threed-bare their apparell, and also appaired their health; then Gentlemen, because of their pale and sickly faces, and patched coates, will not take them into seruice. And husbandmen dare not set them a worke: knowing well enough that he is nothing meete to doe true and faithfull seruice to a poore man with a Spade and Mattocke for small wages and hard fare, which being daintily and tenderly pampered vp in idlenesse and pleasure, was wont with a sword and a buckler by his side, to iette through the streete with a bragging looke, and to thinke himsele too good to be any mans mate. Nay by Saint Mary sir (quoth the Lawyer) not so: For this kinde of men must we make most of; For in them as men of stouter stomacks, bolder spirits, and manlyer courages, then handycrafts men and ploughmen be, doth consist the whole power strength, and puissance of our armie, when we must fight in battaile. Forsooth sir, as well you might say (quoth I) that for warres sake you must cherish theeves: For surely you shall neuer lacke theeves, whiles you have them. No nor theeves be not the most false and faint-hearted souldiours, nor souldiours be not the cowardliest theeves: so well these two crafts agree together. But this fault, though it be much vsed among you, yet is it not peculiar to you only, but common also almost to all nations. Yet France besides this is troubled and infected with a much forer plague. The whole Realme is filled and besieged with hired souldiours in peace time (if that be peace) which be brought in vnder the same colour and pretence, that hath perswaded you to keepe these idle seruising men. For these wise-fooles, & very arch-dolts, thought the wealth of the whole Countrie herein to consist, if there were euer in a readinesse a strong and a sure garrison, specially of old practised souldiours; for they put no trust at all in men vnexercised. And therefore they must be forced to seeke for warre, to the end they may euer haue practised souldiours, and cunning man-slayers, least that (as it is pretily said of Salust) their hands and their minds through idlenesse or lacke of exercise, should waxe dull.

the

But how pernicious and pestilent a thing it is, to maintaine such beasts, the Frenchmen, by their owne harmes haue learned, and the examples of the Romanes, Carthaginians, Syrians, and of many other Countries doe manifestly declare: For not only the Empire, but also the fields and Cities of all these, by diuers occasions haue beene overrunned and destroyed of their owne armies, before-hand had in a readinesse. Now how vnecessary a thing

Soldiers, - Theeves

Betweene souldiours and theeves small diuerfitie.

France, plagued with standing armies.

Soldiers, - man-slayers.

What inconueniences cometh by continuall garrisons of souldiours.

this is, hereby it may appeare : that the French souldiours, which from their youth haue beene practised and inured in feates of armes, doe not cracke or aduance themselves to haue very often got the vpper hand and mastery of your new-made and vnpractised souldiours. But in this point I will not vse many words, lest perchance I may seeme to flatter you. No, nor those same handy-craft men of yours in Cities, nor yet the rude and vplandish ploughmen of the Countrey, are not supposed to be greatly afraid of your Gentlemens idle seruingmen, vnlesse it be such as be not of body or stature correspondent to their strength and courage ; or else whose bold stomackes be discouraged through pouertie. Thus you may see, that it is not to be feared lest they should be effeminated, if they were brought vp in good crafts and labourfome workes, whereby to get their liuings, whose stout and sturdie bodies (for Gentlemen vouchsafe to corrupt and spill none but picked and chosen men) now either by reason of rest and idlenesse be brought to weakenesse : or else by too easie and womanly exercises be made feeble, and vnable to endure hardnesse. Truly howsoeuer the case standeth, this me thinketh is nothing auailable to the Weale publike, for warre sake, which you neuer haue, but when you will your selues, to keepe and maintaine an vnnumerable flocke of that sort of men, that be so troublesome and noyous in peace, whereof you ought to haue a thousand times more regard, then of warre. But yet this is not only the necessarie cause of stealing. There is another, which as I suppose, is proper and peculiar to you Englishmen alone. What is that, quoth the Cardinall ? forsooth my Lord (quoth I) your sheepe, that were wont to be so meeke and tame, and so small eaters ; now, as I heare say, be become so great deuourers, and so wilde, that they eat vp, and swallow downe the very men themselves. They consume, destroy, and deuour whole fields, houses, and Cities: For looke in what parts of the Realme doth grow the finest, and therefore dearest Wooll, there noble

English sheepe deuourers of men.

noble men, & gentlemen, yea, & certain Abbots, holy men no doubt, not contenting themselves with the yearly revenues, and profits, that were wont to grow to their forefathers and predecessors of their lands, nor being content that they live in rest and pleasure, nothing profiting; yea, much noying the Weale publike, leaue no ground for tillage: they inclose all into pastures; they throw downe houses; they plucke downe townes, and leaue nothing standing, but onely the Church to be made a sheep-house. And as though you lost no small quantitie of ground by forrests, chafes, lands, and parkes, those good holy men turne all dwelling places and all glebe land into desolation, and wildernesse.

Therefore that one couetous and vnsatiabie cormorant, Sheep-masters and very plague of his native Countrey, may compasse about and inclose many thousands akers of ground together within one pale or hedge, the husbandmen be thrust out of their owne, or else either by couine and fraude, or violent oppression they be put besides it, or by wrongs and iniuries they be so wearied, that they be compelled to sell all: by one meanes therefore or by other, either by hooke or by crooke they must needs depart away, poore, fillie, wretched soules, men, women, husbands, wiues, fatherlesse children, widdowes, wofull mothers with their young babes, and the whole household small in substance, and much in number, as husbandry requireth many hands.

Away they trudge, I say, out of their known and accustomed houses, finding no place to rest in. Al their household stuffe, which is very little worth, though it might well abide the sale: yet being suddenly thrust out, they be constrained to sell it for a thing of nought. And when they haue wandered abroad till that be spent, what can they the doe but steale, and then iustly pardie be hanged, or else goe about a begging. And yet then also they be cast into Prison as Vagabonds, because they goe about and worke not: whom no man will set a worke, though they neuer so willingly proffer themselves thereto. For one Shep-

heard

The decay of husbandry causeth begge-ry, which is the mother of vagabonds and thieues.

The cause of dearth of victuals.

What in con-uenience commeth of dearth of Wooll.

The cause of dearth of Wooll.

Dearth of cattell, with the cause thereof.

heard or Heardman is enough to eat vp that ground with cattaille, to the occupying whereof, about husbandry, many hands were requisite. And this is also the cause why victuals be now in many places dearer. Yea, besides this the price of wooll is so risen, that poore folkes, which were wont to worke it, and make cloath thereof, be now able to buy none at all. And by this meanes very many be forced to forsake worke, and to giue themselves to idlenesse.

For after that so much ground was inclosed for pasture, an infinite multitude of sheepe died of the rot, such vengeance God tooke of their inordinate and vsfaciable contentousnesse, sending among the sheepe that pestiferous murrein, which much more iustly should haue fallen on the sheepe-masters owne heads. And though the number of sheepe increase neuer so fast, yet the price falleth not one mite, because there be so few sellers: For they be almost all come into a few rich mens hands, whom no need forceth to sell before they lust, and they lust not before they may sell as deare as they lust. Now the same cause bringeth in like dearth of the dearth of the other kindes of cattell, yea and that so much the more, because that after farmes plucked downe, and husbandry decayed, there is no man that passeth for the breeding of young store: for these rich men bring not vp the young ones of great cattell as they doe lambes.

But first they buy them abroad very cheape, and afterward when they be fatted in their pastures, they sell them againe exceeding deare. And therefore (as I suppose) the whole incommoditie hereof is not yet felt: for yet they make dearth onely in those places, where they sell. But when they shall fetch them away from thence where they be bred faster then they can be bought vp: then shall there also be felt great dearth, store beginning there to faile, where the ware is bought. Thus the vnreasonable contentousnesse of a few hath turned that thing to the vtter vndoing of your Island, in the which thing the chiefe felicitie of your Realme did consist: For this great dearth of victuals victuals causeth men to keepe as little houses, and as small hospitalitie as they possible may, and to put away their seruants: whither, I pray you, but a begging; or else (which these gentle blouds, and stout stomacks, will sooner let their mindes vnto stealing? Now to amend the matter, to this wretched beggerie, and miserable pouerty, is ioyned great wantonnesse, importunate superfluitie, and excessive riot: For not only gentlemens seruants, but also handycraft men; yea, and almost the Ploughmen of the Countrie, with all other sorts of people, vse much strange and proud new-fangles in their apparell, and too much prodigall riot, and sumptuous fare at their table.

Dearth of victuals is the decay of house-keeping; whereof ensueth beggerie and theft.

Excesse in apparell and diet, a maintainer of beggery and theft.

Now baudes, queanes, whores, harlots, strumpets, brothel-houses, stewes; and yet another stewes, wine-tauernes, ale-houses, and tipling houses, with so many naughty, leud, and vnlawfull games; as dice, cardes, tables, tennis, boules, coytes, do not all these send the haunTERS of them straight a stealing, when there money is gone? cast out these pernicious abominations; make a law, that they, which plucked downe farmes, and townes of husbandry, shall reedifie them, or else yeeld, and vprender the possession thereof to such, as will goe to the cost of building them anew.

Bauds, whores, wine-tauernes, ale-houses, and vnlawfull games, be very mothers of theecues.

Suffer not these rich men to buy vp all, to incrosse, and forestall, and with their monopolie to keep the market alone as please them. Let not so many be brought vp in idleness; let husbandrie and tillage be restored; let cloth-working be renewed, that there may be honest labours for this idle sort to passe their time in profitably, which hitherto either pouerty hath caused to be thecues, or else now be either vagabonds, or idle seruingmen, and shortly will be thecues. Doubtlesse, vnlesse you finde a remedie for these enormities, you shall in vaine aduance your selues of executing iustice vpon fellows: For this iustice is more beautifull in appearance, and more flourishing to the shew, then either iust or profitable: For by suffering your youth wantonly, and viciously to be brought vp, and to be infected, euen from their tender age, by little and little with vice : then a Gods name to be punished, when they commit the same faults after being come to mans state, which from their youth they were euer like to doe. In this point, I pray you, what other thing doe you, then make theenes, and then punish them ? Now as I was thus speaking, the Lawyer began to make himselfe ready to answer, and was determined with himselfe, to vse the common fashion, and trade of disputers, which be more diligent in rehearsing, then answering, as thinking the memorie worthy of the chiefe praise. Indeed sir, quoth he, you haue said well, being but a stranger, and one that might rather heare something of these matters, then haue any exact or perfect knowledge of the same, as I will incontinent by open prooffe make manifest and plaine. For first I will rehearse in order all that you haue said : then I will declare wherein you be deceiued, through lacke of knowledge, in all our fashions, manners, and customes : and last of all, I will answer your arguments, and confute them euery one. First therefore I will begin where I promised. Foure things you seemed to me. Hold your peace, quoth the Cardinall : for it appeareth that you will make no short answer, which make such a beginning : Wherefore at this time, you shall not take the paines to make your answer, but keepe it to your next meeting, which I would be right glad, that it might be to morrow next, vnlesse either you, or Master Raphael haue earnest let. But now Master Raphael, I would very gladly heare of you, why you thinke thest not worthy to be punished with death, or what other punishment you can deuise more expedient to the Weale publike ? For I am sure that you are not of that minde, that you would haue thest escape vnpunished. For if now the extreame punishment of death cannot cause them to leaue stealing, then if ruffians and robbers should be sure of their liues, what violence, what feare, were able to hold their hands from robbing; which would take the mittigation of the punishment, as a very prouocation to the mischiefe ? Surely my Lord,

Richmen incrossers and forestallers,

The corrupt education of youth, a mother of theecuerie.

He is worthily put to silence that is too full of words.

That thest ought not to be punished by death.

I thinke it not right nor iustice, that the losse of money should cause the losse of mans life: For mine opinion is, that all the goods in the world are not able to counteruaile mans life.

But if they would thus say; that the breaking of Iustice, and the transgression of lawes is recompenced with this punishment, and not the losse of the money, then why may not this extreame and rigorous iustice well be called plaine iniurie? For so cruell gouernance, so strait rules, Strait Lawes and vnmercifull lawes be not allowable, that if a small not allowable. offence bee committed, by and by the sword should be drawne: Nor so stoicall ordinances are to be borne withall, as to count all offences of such equalitie, that the killing of a man, or the taking of his money from him were both a matter, and the one no more heinous offence then the other: betweene the which two, if we haue any respect to equitie, no similitude or equalitie consisteth. God commandeth vs that we shall not kill. And be we then so hastie to kill a man for taking a little money? And if a That mans law ought not to be preiudiciall to Gods law. man would vnderstand killing by this commandement of God, to be forbidden after no larger wise, then mans constitutions define killing to be lawfull; then why may it not likewise by mans constitutions be determined after what sort whoredome, fornication, and periurie may be lawfull? For whereas by the permission of God, no man neither hath power to kill neither himselfe, nor yet any other man: then if a law made by the consent of men, concerning slaughter of men, ought to be of such strength, force, & vertue, that they which contrarie to the commandement of God haue killed those, whom this constitution of man commanded to be killed, be cleane quit and exempt out of the bonds and danger of Gods commandement: shall it not then by this reason follow, that the power of Gods commandement shal extend no further, then mans law doth define, and permit? And so shall it come to passe, that in like manner, mans constitutions in all things shal determine how far the obseruation of all Gods

Theft in the old law not punished by death.

What inconuenience ensueth of punishing theft with death.

Punishing of theft by death causeth theft to be a mur-derer.

What lawfull punishment may be deuised for theft.
How the Ro-manes punished theft.

commandements shall extend. To be short, Moses Law, though it were vngentle and sharpe, as a law that was giuen to bondmen, yea, and them very obstinate, stubborne, and stiffe-necked: yet it punished theft by the purse, and not with death. And let vs not thinke that God in the new law of clemencie and mercie, vnder the which he ruleth vs with fatherly gentlenesse, as his deare children hath giuen vs greater scope and licence to the execution of crueltie, one vpon another. Now ye haue heard the reasons, wherby I am perswaded, that this punishment is vnlawfull. Furthermore, I thinke that there is no body that knoweth not, how vnreasonable, yea, how pernicious a thing it is to the Weale publike, that a theefe and an homicide or murderer, should suffer equall and like punishment: For the theefe seeing that man, that is condemned for theft in no lesse ieopardie, nor iudged to no lesse punishment, then him that is conuict of manslaughter; through this cogitation onely, he is strongly and forcibly prouoked, and in a manner constrained to kill him, whom else he would haue but robbed: For the murder being once done, he is in lesse feare, and in more hope that the deed shall not be bewrayed or knowne, seeing the partie is now dead, and rid out of the way, which onely might haue vttered and disclosed it.

But if he chance to be taken and disceried; yet he is in no more danger and ieopardie, then if he had committed but single felonie. Therefore whiles we goe about with such crueltie to make theeues afraid, we prouoke them to kill good men. Now as touching this question, what punishment were more commodious and better: that truly in my iudgement is easier to be found, then what punishment might be worse. For why should we doubt that to be a good and a profitable way for the punishment of offenders, which we know did in times past so long please the Romanes, men in the administration of a Weale publike most expert, politique and canning? Such as among them were conuict of great and heynous trespasses, them them they condemne into stone quarries, and into mines to digge mettall, there to be kept in chaines all the daies of their life. But as concerning this matter, I allow the ordinance of nation so well as that which I saw, whiles I trauelled abroad about the world, vsed in Persia among the people that commonly be called the Polylerites: whose land is both large and ample, and also well and wittily gouerned; and the people in all conditions free, and ruled by their owne lawes, sauing that they pay a yearly tribute to the great King of Persia.

A worthy and commendable punishment of theues in the Weale publike of the Polilerites in Persia.

But because they be farre from the sea, compassed and inclosed, almost round about with high mountaines, and doe content themselues with the fruits of their own land, which is of it selfe very fertill and fruitfull: for this cause neither they goe to other Countries, nor other come to them. And according to the old custome of the Land, they desire not to enlarge the bounds of their Dominions: and those that they haue, by reason of the high hills be easily defended: and the tribute which they pay to their chiefe Lord and King, setteth them quit and free from war-fare. Thus their life is commodious rather then gallant, and may better be called happy or wealthy, then notable and famous: For they be not knowne, as much as by name, I suppose sauing onely to their next neighbours and borders. They that in this Land be attained and conuict of felonie, make restitution of that which they stole, to the right owner: and not (as they doe in other lands) to the King: whom they thinke to haue no more right to the theefe-stolen thing, then the theefe himselfe hath. But if the thing be lost or made away, then the value of it is paid of the goods of such offenders, which else remaineth all whole to their wiues, and children. And they themselues be condemned to be common laborers, and only the theft be very hainous, they be neither locked in prison, nor fettered in giues, but be vnited and goe at large, laboring in the common workes. They that refuse labour, or goe slowly or slacke to their worke, be not onely tyed in chaines, but also pricked forward with stripes. But being diligent about their worke, they liue without checke or rebuke. Euery night they be called in by name, and be locked in their chambers. Beside their daily labour, their life is nothing hard or incommodiuous; their fare is indifferent good, borne at the charges of the Weale publike; because they be common seruants to the Common-wealth. But their charges in all places of the land is not borne alike. For in some parts, that which is bestowed vpon them is gathered of almes. And though that way be vncertaine; yet the people be so full of mercie and pittie, that none is found more profitable or plentiful. In some places certaine Ladies be appointed hereunto: of the reuenues whereof they be maintained. And in some places euery man giueth a certaine tribute for the same vse and purpose.

A priuie nip for them that doe otherwise.

Theues condemned to be common labourers.

* Lands

Seruimgmen.

Againe, in some parts of the land these seruimgmen (for so be these damned persons called) doe not common worke, but as euery priuate man needeth labours, so he commeth into the market place, and there hireth some of them for meat and drinke, and a certain limited wages by the day, somewhat cheaper then he should hire a free man. It is also lawfull for them to chastice the slouth of these seruimgmen with stripes. By this meanes they neuer lack worke, and besides the gaining of their meat and drinke, euery one of them bringeth daily something into the common Treasury. All and euery one of them be apparelled in one colour. Their heads be not polled or shauen, but rounded a little aboue the eares. And the tip of the one eare is cut off. Euery one of them may take meate and drinke of their friends, and also a coat of their owne colour: but to receiue money is death, as well to the giuer, as to the receiuer. And no lesse ieopardie it is for a free man to receiue money of a seruimgman, for any manner of cause: and likewise for seruimgmen to touch weapons. The seruimgmen of euery feuerall shire be distinct and knowne from other, by their feuerall and distinct badges: which which to cast away is death: as it is also to be seene out of the precinct of their owne shiere; or to talke with a seruuingman of another shiere. And it is no lesse danger to them, for to intend to runne away, then to doe it indeed.

 Yea and to conceale such an enterprise in a seruuingman, it is death; in a freeman, seruitude. Of the contrary part, An euill entent esteemed as the deed. to him that openeth and vttereth such counsels, be decreed large gifts: to a free man, a great summe of money; to a seruuingman freedome: and to them both, forgiuenesse and pardon of that they were of counsell in that pretence. So that it can neuer be so good for them to goe forward in their euill purpose, as by repentance to turne backe. This is the Law and order in this behalfe, as I haue shewed you: Wherein what humanitie is vsed, how farre it is from crueltie, and how commodious it is, you doe plainly perceiue. For as much as the end of their wrath and punishment intendeth nothing else, but the destruction of The right end and intent of punishment.
 vices, and sauing of men: with so vsing, and ordering them, that they cannot chuse but be good; and what harme soeuer they did before, in the residue of their life, to make amends for the same.

Moreouer it is so little feared, that they should turne again to their vicious conditions, that wayfaring men will for their safeguard choose them to their guides before any other, in euery shiere changing and taking new: For if they would commit robbery, they haue nothing about them meete for that purpose. They may touch no weapons: money found about them, should betray the rob-berie. They should be no sooner taken with the manner, but forthwith they should be punished. Neither can they haue any hope at all to scape away by flying: For how should a man, that in no part of his apparell is like other men, flye priuily and vnknowne, vnlesse he would runne away naked? Howbeit, so also flying, he should be discryed by the rounding of his head, and his eare-marke.
 But it is a thing to be doubted, that they will lay their heads together, and conspire against the Weale publike.

No,

No, no, I warrant you : For the seruimgmen of one shiere alone, could neuer hope to bring to passe such an enterprife, without solyciting, entising, and alluring the seruimgmen of many other shieres to take their parts. Which thing is to them so impossible, that they may not as much as speake or talke together, or salute one another. No it is not to be thought that they would make their owne countrymen and companions of their counsell in such a matter, which they know well should be ieopardie to the concealor thereof, and great commoditie and goodnesse to the opener and detector of the same. Whereas on the other part, there is none of them all hopelesse or in despaire to recouer againe his former estate of freedome, by humble obedience, by pacient suffering, and by giuing good tokens and likelyhood of himselfe, that he will euer after that, liue like a true, and an honest man.

For euery yeare diuers of them be restored to their freedome, through the commendation of patience. When I had thus spoken, saying moreouer, that I could see no cause why this order might not be had in England, with much more profit, then the Iustice which the lawyer so highly praised. Nay, quoth the Lawyer, this could neuer be so stablished in England, but that it must needs bring the Weale publike into great ieopardie and hazard. And as he was thus saying, he shaked his head, and made a wrie mouth, and so he held his peace. And all that were present, with one assent agreed to his saying. Well, quoth the Cardinall, yet it were hard to iudge without a prooffe, whether this order would doe well here or no. But when the sentence of death is giuen, if then the King should command execution to be referred and spared, and would proue this order and fashion, taking away the priuiledge of Sanctuaries: if then the prooffe should declare the thing to be good and profitable, then it were well done that it were stablished: Else then condemned and reprimed persons may as well be put to death after this prooffe, as when they were first cast. Neither any ieopardie can in the meane space grow hereof. Yea, and me thinketh that these Vagabonds may very well be ordered after the same Vagabonds; fashion, against whom we haue hitherto made so many lawes, and so little preuailed. When the Cardinall had thus said, then euery man gaue great praise to my sayings, which a little before they had disallowed. But most of all was esteemed that which was spoken of vagabonds, because it was the Cardinals addition. I cannot tell whether it were best to rehearse the communication that followed; for it was not very sad. But yet you shall heare it, for there was no euill in it, and partly it pertained to the matter before said. There chaunced to stand by a certaine ieaisting Parasite, or scoffer, which would seeme to resemble and counterfet the foole. But he did in such wise counterfet, that he was almost the very same indeed that he laboured to represent: he so studied with words & sayings, brought forth so out of time and place, to make sport and more laughter, that he himselfe was oftner laughed at, then his ieaists were. Yet the foolish fellow brought out now and then such indifferent and reasonable stuffe, that he made the prouerbe true, which saith: He that shooteth oft, at the last shall hit the marke: So that when one of the companie said, that through my communication, a good order was found for the eues, and that the Cardinall also had well provided for vagabonds, so that only remained some good prouision to be made for them that through sickness and age were fallen into pouerty, & were become so impotent and vnweldie, that they were not able to worke for their liuing. Tush (quoth he) let me alone with them: you shall see me doe well enough with them. For I had rather than any good, that this kinde of people were driuen somewhere out of my sight, they haue so sore troubled me many times and oft, when they haue with their lamentable teares begged mony of me: & yet they could neuer to my mind so tune their song, that thereby they euer got of me one farthing. For euer more the one of these chanced: either that I would not; or else
the

The wauering iudgements of flatterers.

Sicke, aged, impotent persons, and beggers.

A common prouerbe among beggers.

that I could not, because I had it not. Therefore now they be waxed wise: For when they seeme goe by, because they will not leese their labour, they let me passe, and say not one word to me. So they looke for nothing of me, no in good sooth; no more, then if I were a Priest, or a Monke. But I will make a Law, that all these beggers shall be distributed, and bestowed into houses of religion. The men shall be made lay brethren, as they call them; and the women, Nunnes. Hereat the Cardinall smiled, and allowed it in iest, yea, and all the residue in good earnest.

A merry talke
betweene a Friar and a foole.

But a certaine Frier, graduate in diuinitie, tooke such pleasure and delight in this ieafts of Priests and Monkes, that he also (being else a man of grissie and sterne grauitie) began merrily and wantonly to iest and taunt. Nay, quoth he, you shall not so be rid and dispatched of beggers, vnlesse you make some prouision also for vs Friars. Why, quoth the Ieafter, that is done already, for my Lord himselfe set a very good order for you, when he decreed, that vagabonds should be kept strait, & set to work: for you be the greatest and veriest vagabonds that be. This ieaft also when they saw the Cardinall not disproue it, euery man tooke it gladly, sauing only the Friar: For he (and that no meruaile) being thus touched on the quicke, and hit on the gaule, so fretted, so fumed, and chafed at it, and was in such a rage, that he could not refraine himselfe from chiding, scolding, railing, and reuiling. He called the fellow ribbald, villaine, iauell, backbiter, slanderer, and the childe of perdition: citing therewith terrible threatnings out of holy Scripture. Then the ieafting scoffer began to play the scoffer indeede, and verily he was good at that; for he could play a part in that play, no man better. Pacient your selfe, good Master Fryar, quoth he, and be not angry; for Scripture saith: In your patience you shall saue your soules. Then the Friar (for I will rehearse his owne very words:) No gallowes wretch, I am not angry (quoth he) or at the least-wise, I doe not sinne: for the Psalmist saith; Be you angry, and sinne not.

Talke qualified according to the person that speaketh.

Then

Then the Cardinall spake gently to the Fryar, and desired him to quiet himselfe. No my Lord, quoth he, I speake not but of a good zeale as I ought; for holy men had a good zeale: Wherefore it is said; The zeale of thy house hath eaten me. And it is sung in the Church: The scorner of Helizeus, whiles he went vp into the house of God, felt the zeale of the bald, as peradventure this scorning villain ribbould shall feele. You do it (quoth the Cardinall) perchance of a good minde and affection: but me thinketh you should doe, I cannot tell whether more holily, certes more wisely, if you would not set your wit to a fooles wit, and with a foole take in hand a foolish contention. No forsooth my Lord (quoth he) I should not do more wisely: for Salomon the wise saith: Answer a foole according to his folly, like as I do now, and do shew him the pit that he shall fall into, if he take not heed: For if many scorner of Helizeus, which was but one bald man, felt the zeale of the bald, how much more shall one scorner of many Friars feele, among whom be many bald men? And wee haue also the Popes Bulls, whereby all that mock and scorn vs be excommunicated, suspended, and accursed. The Cardinall seeing no end would be made, sent away the leaster by a priuie becke, and turned the communication to another matter. Shortly after, when he was risen from the table, hee went to heare his suitors, and so dismissed vs. Looke Master Moore, with how long and tedious a tale I haue kept you, which surely I would haue beene ashamed to haue done, but that you so earnestly desired mee, and did after such a sort giue care vnto it, as though you would not that any parcell of that communication should be left out. Which though I haue done somewhat briefly, yet could I not choose but rehearse it, for the iudgement of them, which when they had improved and disallowed my sayings, yet incontinent hearing the Cardinall allow them, did themselves also approue the same: so impudently flattering him, that they were nothing ashamed to admit, yea almost in good earnest, his ieastructures & foolish inuentions; because that he himselfe by smiling at them, did seeme not to disproue them. So that hereby you may right-well perceine how little the courtiers would regard and esteeme me and my sayings. I ensure you, Master Raphael, quoth I, I tooke great delectation in hearing you: all things that you said, were spoken so wittily and so pleasantly. And me thought me selfe to be in the meane time, not onely at home in my Countrey, but also through the pleasant remembrance of the Cardinal, in whose house I was brought vp of a childe, to waxe a childe againe. And friend Raphael, though I did beare very great loue towards you before, yet seeing you doe so earnestly fauour this man, you will not beleeeue how much my loue towards you is now increased. But yet, all this notwithstanding, I can by no meanes change my mind, but that I must needs beleeeue, that you, if you be disposed, and can finde in your heart to follow some Princes Court, shall with your good counsels greatly help and further the Common-wealth. Wherefore there is nothing more appertaining to your duty, that is to say, to the dutie of a good man. For whereas your Plato iudgeth that weale publikes shall by this means attaine perfect felicitie, either if Philosophers be Kings, or else if Kings giue themselves to the study of Philosophie; how far I pray you, shall common-wealths then be from this felicity, if Philosophers wil vouchsafe to instruct kings with their good counsell? They be not so vnkind (quoth he) but they would gladly do it, yea, many haue done it already in books that they haue put forth, if Kings & Princes would be willing and ready to follow good counsell. But Plato doubtlesse did well fore-see, vnlesse Kings themselves would apply their mindes to the studie of Philosophy, that else they would neuer thorowly allow the counsell of Philosophers, being themselves before euen from their tender age infected, and corrupt with peruerse and euill opinions. Which thing Plato himselfe proued true in king Dyonise. If I should propose to any King wholsome decrees, doing my endeouour to pluck out of his mind mind the pernicious originall causes of vice and noughtinesse, thinke you not that I should forthwith either be driuen away, or else made a laughing stocke? Well, suppose I were with the French King, and there sitting in his Councell, whiles in that most secret consultation, the King himselfe there being present in his owne person, they beat their braines, and search the very bottomes of their wits, to discusse by what craft and meanes the King may still keepe Millaine, and draw to him againe fugitiue Naples: The French-and then how to conquer the Venetians, and how to bring men priuily be vnder his iurisdiction all Italie; then how to winne the counsailed fro the desire of Dominion of Flanders, Brabant, and all Burgundie; with diuers other Lands, whose Kingdomes hee hath long agoe in mind and purpose inuaded. Heere, whiles one counsaileth to conclude a League of Peace with the Venetians; so long to endure, as shall be thought meete and expedient for their purpose, and to make them also of their Councell; yea, and besides that, to giue them part of the prey, which afterward, when they haue brought their purpose about, after their owne mindes, they may require and clayme againe: Another thinketh best to hyre the Germanes: Another would haue the fauour of the Switzers wonne with Money: Another aduise, is to appease the puissant power of the Emperours Maiestie with Gold, as with a most pleasant and acceptable sacrifice: Whiles another giueth counsaile to make peace with the King of Arragon, and to restore vnto him his owne Kingdome of Nauarre, as a full assurance of peace: Another commeth in with his fine egges, and aduise to hooke in the King of Castile, with some hope of affinitie, or allyance; and to bring to their part certaine Peeres of his Court, for great Pensions.

Lance knights.

Whiles they all stay at the chiefest doubt of all, what to doe in the meane time with England; and yet agree all in this, to make peace with the Englishmen, and with most sure and strong bonds to binde that weake and feeble friendship, so that they must be called friends, and had in suspition as enemies. And that therefore the Scots must be had in a readinesse, as it were in a standing, readie at all occasions (in case the Englishmen should stir neuer so little) incontinent to set vpon them. And moreouer, priuily and secretly (for openly it may not be done, by the Truce that is taken;) priuily therefore, I say, to make much of some Peere of England, that is banished his Countrey, which must clayme Title to the Crowne of the Realme, and affirme him selfe iust Inheritor thereof: that by this subtile meanes they may hold to them the King, in whom else they haue but small trust and affiance.

Here, I say, where so great and high matters be in consultation, where so many noble and wise men counsaile their King onely to warre: here if I, silly man, should rise vp, and will them to turne ouer the Lease, and learne a new Lesson, saying, That my counsaile is not to meddle with Italie, but to tarrie still at home; and that the Kingdome of France alone is almost greater, then that it may wel be governed of one man; so that the King should not neede to studie how to get more: And then should propose vnto them the Decrees of the People that be called the Achoriens, which be situate ouer-against the Island of Vtopia, on the South-east side. These Achoriens once made warre, in their Kings Quarrell, for to get him another Kingdome which he layd clayme vnto, and aduanced him selfe right Inheritor to the Crowne thereof, by the Title of an old allyance. At the last, when they had gotten it, and saw that they had euen as much vexation and trouble in keeping it, as they had in getting it; and that either their new conquered subiects by sundrie occasions were making dayly Insurrections to rebell against them, or else that other Countries were continually with diuers inrodes and forraignes inuading them; so that they were euer fighting, either for them, or against them, and neuer could breake vp their Campes: Seeing themselves in the meane season, pilled and impouerished, their Money carryed out of the Realme; their owne men killed, to maintaine the glorie of another Nation: when they had no warre, peace nothing better better then warre, by reason that their people in warre had so inured themselves to corrupt and wicked manners, that they had taken a delight and pleasure in robbing and stealing; that through manslaughter, they had gathered boldnesse to mischief; that their Lawes were had in contempt, and nothing set by, or regarded; that their King being troubled with the charge and gouernance of two Kingdomes, could not, nor was not able perfectly to discharge his office towards them both: seeing againe, that all these euils and troubles were endlesse, at the last layde their heads together, and like faithfull and louing subiects gaue to their King free choise and libertie to keepe still the one of these two Kingdomes, whether hee would; alleging, that hee was not able to keepe both, and that they were moe then might well be gouerned of halfe a King, for as much as no man would be content to take him for his Mulettor, that keepeth another mans Mules besides his. So this good Prince was constrained to be content with his old Kingdome, and to giue ouer the new to one of his friends, who shortly after was violently driuen out.

A notable example, and worthy to be followed.

Furthermore, if I should declare vnto them, that all this busie preparance to warre, whereby so many Nations for his sake should be brought into a troublesome hurly-burly, when all his Coffers were emptied, his Treasures wasted, and his People destroyed, should at the length through some mischance, be in vaine, and to none effect: and that therefore it were best for him to content himselfe with his owne Kingdome of France, as his fore-fathers and predecessors did before him; to make much of it, to enrich it, and to make it as flourishing as he could; to endeavour himselfe to loue his subiects, and againe to be beloued of them; willingly to liue with them, peaceably to gouerne them, and with other Kingdomes not to meddle, seeing that which he hath already is euen enough for him, yea, and more then he can well turne him to.

This mine aduice, Master Moore, how think you, would it not be hardly taken? So God help me, not very thank-fully, fully, quoth I. Well let vs proceed then, quoth he. Suppose that some King and his Councell were together, whetting their wits, and deuising what subtil craft they might inuent, to enrich the King with great Treasures of Money.

Enhauncing and embasing of Coynes.

First, one counsaileth to rayse and enhance the valuation of Money, when the King must pay any; and againe, to call downe the value of Coyne to lesse then it is worth, when he must receiue or gather any: For thus, great summes shall be payd with a little Money; and where little is due, much shall be receined.

Counterfeit Warres.

Another counsaileth to faine Warre: that when vnder this colour and pretence the King hath gathered great abundance of Money, hee may, when it shall please him; make peace with great solemnitic, and holy ceremonies, to blinde the eyes of the poore Communalitie, as taking pittie and compassion forsooth vpon mans blood, like a louing and a mercifull Prince.

The renewing of old Lawes.

Another putteth the King in remembrance of certaine old and moath-eaten Lawes, that of long time haue not bene put in execution, which because no man can remember that they were made, euery man hath transgressed. The fines of these Lawes he counsaileth the King to require: for there is no way so profitable, nor more honourable, as that which hath a shew and colour of Iustice.

Restraints.

Another aduiseh him to forbid many things vnder great Penalties and Fines, specially such things as is for the peoples profit not to be vsed; and afterward, to dispence for Money with them, which by this prohibition sustaine losse and dammage: For by this meanes, the fauour of the people is wonne, and profit riseth two wayes: first, by taking forfeits of them, whom couetousnesse of gaynes hath brought in danger of this Statute; and also by selling Pri- uiledges and Licences: which the better that the Prince is

Selling of Licences.

forsooth, the dearer hee selleth them, as one that is loth to graunt to any priuate person any thing that is against the profit of his people; and therefore may set none, but at an exceeding deare price.

Another

An other giueth the king counsell to endanger vnto his grace the Iudges of the Realme, that he may haue them euermore on his side, and that they may in euery matter dispute and reason for the Kings right. Yea, and further to call them into his Pallace, and to require them, there to argue and discusse his matters in his owne presence: So there shall be no matter of his so openly wrong and vniust, wherein one or other of them, either because he will haue some thing to alledge and object; or that he is ashamed to say that which is said already; or else to picke a thanke with his Prince, will not finde some hole open to set a snare in, wherewith to take the contrary part in a trip. Thus whiles the Iudges cannot agree amongst themselves, reasoning and arguing of that which is plaine enough, and bringing the manifest truth in doubt: in the meane season, the king may take a fit occasion to vnderstand the law as shall most make for his aduantage, wherunto all other for shame, or for feare will agree. Then the Iudges may be bold to pronounce on the kings side: for he that giueth sentence for the king, cannot be without a good excuse: For it shall be sufficient for him to haue equitie on his part, or the bare words of the law, a wrythen and wrested vnderstanding of the same (or else, which with good and iust Iudges is of greater force then all lawes be) the kings indisputable prerogatiue. To conclude, all the Counsellors agree and consent together with the rich Crassus, The saying of rich Crassus. that no abundance of gold can be sufficient for a Prince, which must keepe and maintaine an Armie: furthermore that a king, though he would, can doe nothing vniustly.

For all that men haue, yea, also the men themselves be all his. And that euery man hath so much of his owne, as the kings gentleness hath not taken from him. And that it shall be most for the kings aduantage, that his subiects haue very little or nothing in their possession, as whose safeguard doth herein consist, that his people do not waxe wanton and wealthy through riches and libertie, because where these things be, there men be not wont patiently to obey hard, vniust, and vnlawfull commandements. Whereas on the other part, neede and pouertie doth hold downe and keepe vnder stout courages, and maketh them patient perforce, taking from them bold and rebelling stomackes.

Heere againe if I should rise vp, and boldly affirme, that all these counsels be to the King dishonour and reproach, whose honour & safetie is more and rather supported and vpholden by the wealth and riches of his people, then by his owne treasures: and if I should declare that the communalitie chooseth their King for their owne sake, and not for his sake: to the intent, that through his labour and studie they might all liue wealthie, safe from wrongs and iniuries: and that therefore the King ought to take more care for the wealth of his people, then for his owne wealth, euen as the office and dutie of a shepheard is in that he is a shepheard, to feede his sheepe rather then himselfe. For as touching this, that they thinke the defence and maintenance of peace to consist in pouertie of the people, the thing it selfe sheweth that they be far out of the way: For where shall a man finde more wrangling, quarrelling, brawling and chiding, then among beggars? Who be more desirous of new mutations and alterations, then they that be not content with the present state of that life? Or finally, who be bolder stomaked to bring all in a hurly-burly (thereby trusting to get some winde-fall) then they that haue now nothing to leese? And if any King were so finally regarded, and so lightly esteemed, yea, so be hated of his subiects, that other waies he could not keepe them in awe, but onely by open wrongs, by polling and shauing, and by bringing them to beggerie, surely it were better for him to forsake his kingdome, then to hold it by this meanes: whereby though the name of a King be kept, yet the Maiestie is lost: For it is against the dignitie of a King to haue rule ouer beggars, but rather ouer rich and wealthy men. Of this minde was the hardy

Pouertie the mother of debate, and decay of Realms.

A worthy saying of Fabrice.

and couragious Fabrice, when he said, that He had rather be

be a ruler of rich men, then be rich himselfe.

And verily, one man to live in pleasure and wealth, whiles all other weep and smart for it, that is the part, not of a King, but a lay iour. To be short, as he is a foolish Phisitian, that cannot cure his Patients disease, vnlesse he cast him in another sicknesse; so he that cannot amend the liues of his subiects, but by taking from them the wealth and commoditie of life: he must needes grant, that he knoweth not the wealth and commoditie of life; he must needs grant, that he knoweth not the feate how to gouerne men. But let him rather amend his owne life, renounce vn honest pleasures, and forsake pride: for these be the chiefe vices that cause him to runne in the contempt or hatred of his people. Let him liue of his owne, hurting no man: Let him doe cost not aboue his power: Let him restraine wickednesse: Let him preuent vices, and take away the occasions of offences by well-ordering his subiects, and not by suffering wickednesse to encrease, afterward to be punished: Let him not be too hastie in calling again lawes which a custome hath abrogated; specially such as haue been long forgotten, & neuer lacked nor needed. And let him neuer vnder the cloake and pretence of transgression, take such fines and forfeits, as no Iudge will suffer a priuate person to take, as vniust and full of guile.

Here if I should bring forth before the the law of the Macariens, which be not far distant from Vtopia, whose King, the day of his Coronation is bound (by a solemne oath, that he shall neuer at any time haue in his treasure aboue a thousand pound of Gold or Silver. They say that a very good King, which tooke farre more care for the wealth and commoditie of his Countrie, then for the enriching of himselfe, made this law to be a stop and barre to kings from heaping and whording vp so much money as might impouerish their people: For he fore-saw that this sum of treasure would suffice to support the king in battaile against his owne people, if they should chance to rebell: and also to maintaine his warres against the inuasions of his forraine enemies. Againe, he perceiued the same stocke of money to be too little and vnsufficient to encourage and enable him wrongfully to take away other mens goods: which was the chiefe cause why the law was made. Another cause was this. He thought that by this prouision his people should not lack money, wherewith to maintain their daily occupying and chaffer.

A strange and notable law of the Macariens.

And seeing the King could not choose but lay out and bestow all that came in about the prescript summe of his stocke, he thought he would seeke no occasions to doe his subiects iniurie. Such a king shall be feared of euill men, and loued of good men. These, and such other informations, if I should vse among men wholly inclined and giuen to the contrary part, how deafe eares thinke you shall I haue? Deafe hearers doubtlesse (quoth I,) And in good faith no meruaile. And to be plaine with you, truly I cannot allow that such communication shall be vsed, or such counsell giuen, as you be sure shall neuer be regarded nor receiued: For how can so strange informations be profitable, or how can they be beaten into their heads, whose minds be already preuented, with cleane contrary perswasions? This schoole Philosophie is not vnpleasant among friends in familiar communication, but in the counsels of Kings, where great matters be debated and reasoned with great authoritie, these things haue no place.

Schole Philosophie in the consultations of Princes hath no place.

That is it which I meant (quoth he) when I said Philosophie had no place among Kings. Indeed (quoth I) this schoole philosophie hath not: which thinketh all things meet for euery place. But there is another Philosophie more ciuill, which knoweth, as ye would say, her owne stage, and thereafter ordering and behauing her selfe in the play that she hath in hand, playeth her part accordingly with comelineffe, vtrering nothing out of due order and fashion. And this is the Philosophie that you must vse. Or else whiles a Comedie of Plautus is playing, and the vilde bondmen scoffing and trifling among them-

A fine and fit
similitude.

themselves, if you should suddenly come vpon the stage in a Philosophers apparell, and rehearse out of Otania the place wherein Seneca desputeth with Nero: had it not beene better for you to haue played the dumme person, then by rehearsing that, which serued neither for the time nor place to haue made such a tragicall Comedie or gallimalfric? For by bringing in othes stufte that nothing appertaineth to the matter, you must needs marr and preuent the play that is in hand, though the stufte that you bring be much better. What part soeuer you haue taken vpon you, play that as well as you can and make the best of it: And doe not therefore disturbe and bring out of order the whole matter, because that another, which is merrier and better commeth to your remembrance.

A dum Player.

So the case standeth in a Common-wealth: and so it is in the consultations of Kings and Princes. If euill opinions and naughtie perswasions cannot be vtterly and quite plucked out of their hearts, if you cannot euen as you would remedie vices, which vse and custome hath confirmed: yet for this cause you must not leaue and forsake the Common-wealth: you must not forsake the ship in a tempest, because you cannot rule and keepe downe the windes. No nor you must not labour to driue into their heads new and strange informations, which you know well shall be nothing regarded with them that be of cleane contrary mindes. But you must with a craftie wile and subtil traine studie and endeavour your selfe, as much as in you lieth, to handle the matter wittily and handsomely for the purpose, and that which you cannot turne to good, so to order it that it be not very bad: For it is not possible for all things to be wel, vnlesse all men were good: which I thinke will not be yet these good many yeares. By this meanes (quoth he) nothing else will be brought to passe; but whiles I goe about to remedie the madnesse of others, I should be euen as mad as they: For if I would speake things that be true, I must needs speake such things: but as for to speake false things, whether that be a Philoso-

The Vtopian
Weale publike.

phers part or no I cannot tell, truly it is not my part. Howbeit this communication of mine though peradventure it may seeme vnpleasant to them, yet cannot I see why it should seeme strange, or foolishly new fangled. If so be that I should speake those things that Plato saith in his Weale publike, or that the Vtopians doe in theirs, these things though they were (as they be indeed) better, yet they might seeme spoken out of place. For as much as heere amongst vs, euery man hath his possessions seuerall to himselfe, and there all things be in common.

But what was in my communication contained, that might not, and ought not in any place to be spoken? Sauiug that to them which haue throughly decreed and determined with themselves to runne headlong on the contrarie way, it cannot be acceptable and pleasant, because it calleth them backe, and sheweth them the icopardies: Verily if all things that euill and vicious manners haue caused to seeme vnconuenient and nought should be refused, as things vnmete and reproachfull, then we must among Christian people wink at the most part of all those things which Christ taught vs, and so straightly forbade them to be winked at, that those things also which he whispered in the eares of his disciples, he commanded to be proclaimed in open houses. And yet the most part of the is more dissident from the maners of the world now a dayes, then my communication was. But Preachers silly and wily men following your counsell (as I suppose) because they saw men euill-willing to frame their maners to Christs rule, they haue wrested and wried his doctrine, and like a rule of lead haue applyed it to mens manners: that by some meanes at the least way, they might agree together. Whereby I cannot see what good they haue done: but that men may more sickly be euill. And I truly should preuaile euen as little in kings counsels: For either I must say otherwaies then they say, and then I were as good to say nothing, or else I must say the same that they say, and (as Masio saith in Terence) helpe to further further their madnesse. For that craftie wile & subtile train of yours, I cannot perceiue to what purpose it serueth, where with you would haue me to studie and endeuer my selfe, if all things cannot be made good, yet to handle them wittily & handsomely for the purpose, that as far forth as is possible, they may not be very euill. For there is no place to dissemble in, nor to work in. Naughty counsels must be openly allowed, & very pestilent decrees must be approued.

He shall be counted worse then a spy, yea, almost as euill as a Traitor, that with a faint-heart doth praise euill and noisome decrees. Moreouer a man can haue no occasion to do good, changing into the company of them, which will sooner peruert a good man then be made good themselves: through whose euill company he shalbe mared, or else if he remaine good and innocent, yet the wickednesse and folly of others shall be imputed to him, and laid in his neck. So that it is impossible with that crafty wile, & subtile traine to turne any thing to better. Wherefore Plato by a goodly similitude declareth, why wise men refraine to meddle in the Common-wealth: For when they see the people swarme into the streetes, and daily wet to the skin with raine, & yet cannot perswade them to go out of the raine, and to take their house, knowing well, that if they should goe out to them, they should nothing preuaile, nor winne ought by it, but with them be wet also in the raine, they doe keepe themselves within their houses, being content that they be safe themselves, seeing they cannot remedie the folly of the people. How be it doubtlesse Master Moore (to speake truly as my mind giueth me) where possessions be priuate, where money beareth all the stroake, it is hard and almost impossible that there the Weale publike may iustly be gouerned, and prosperously flourish; vnlesse you thinke thus: That Iustice is there executed, where al things come into the hands of euill men; or that prosperitie there flourisheth, where all is diuided among a few: which few neuerthelesse doe not leade their liues very wealthely, and the residue liue miserably, wretchedly, and beggerly.

Where

Wherefore when I consider with my selfe, and wey in my minde, the wise and godly ordinances of the Protopians; among whom, with very few lawes all things be so well and wealthie ordered, that vertue is had in a price and estimation, and yet all things being there common, euery man hath abundance of euery thing. Againe, on the other part, when I compare with them so many nations euery making new lawes, yet none of them all well and sufficiently furnished with lawes: where euery man calleth that he hath gotten, his own proper and priuate goods, where so many new lawes daily made, be not sufficient for euery man to enioy, defend, and know from another mans that which he calleth his owne: which thing the infinite controuersies in the law, daily rising, neuer to be ended, plainly declare to be true. These things (I say) when I consider with my selfe, I hold well with Plato, and do nothing meruaile, that he would make no lawes for them, that refused those lawes, whereby all men should haue and enioy equall portions of wealths and commodities.

Plato willed all things in a Common-wealth to be common,

For the wise man did easily fore-see, this to be the one and only way to the wealth of a communitie, if equalitie of all things should be brought in and stablished. Which I thinke is not possible to be obserued, where euery mans goods be proper and peculiar to himselfe: For where euery man vnder certaine titles and prerences draweth and plucketh to himselfe as much as he can; so that a few diuide among themselues all the whole riches, be there neuer so much abundance and store, there to the residue is left lack and powertie.

And for the most part it chanceth, that this latter sort is more worthy to enioy that state of wealth, then the other be: because the rich men be couetous, craftie, and vnprofitable. On the other part, the poore be lowly, simple, and by their daily labour, more profitable to the Common-wealth, then to themselues. Thus I do fully perswade my selfe, that no equall and iust distribution of things can be made, nor that perfect wealth shal euery be among men, vnlesse

vnlesse this proprietie be exiled and banished. But so long as it shall continue, so long shall remaine among the most and best part of men, the heavy and incurtable burden off pouertie and wretchednesse. Which, as I graunt that it may be somewhat eased, so I vtterly deny that it can wholly to be taken away: For if there were a Statute made, that no man should haue in his stocke aboue a prescript and appointed sum of money: if it were by certaine lawes decreed, that neither the king should be of too great power, neither the people too haughtie and wealthie; and that Offices should not by inordinate suite, or by brybes and gifts: that they should neither be bought nor sold; nor that it should be needfull for the officers, to be at any cost or charge in their offices: for so occasions giuen to them by fraude and rauine to gather vp their money againe; and by reason of gifts and bribes, the offices be giuen to rich men, which should rather haue beene executed of wise men: by such lawes I say, like as sicke bodies that be desperate and past cure, be wont with continuall good cherishing to be kept and botched vp for a time: so these euils also may be lightned and mitigated. But that they may be perfectly cured, brought to a good and vpright state, it is not to be hoped for, whiles euery man is Master of his owne to himselfe. Yea and whiles you goe about to doe your cure of one part, you shall make bigger the sore of another part, so the helpe of one causeth anothers harme: forasmuch as nothing can be giuen to any one vnlesse it be taken from another. But I am of a contrary opinion (quoth I) for me thinketh that men shall neuer there liue wealthie, where all things be common: For how can there be abundance of goods, or of any thing, where euery man with-draweth his hand from labour? Whom the regard of his owne gaines driueth not to worke, but the hope that he hath in other mens trauailes maketh him sloathfull.

H

Then

Then when they be pricked with pouertie, and yet no man can by any law or right defend that for his owne, which hee hath gotten with the labour of his owne hands, shall not there of necessitie be continuall sedition and bloudshed? Specially the authoritie and reuerence of Magistrates, being taken away, which, what place it may haue with such men among whom is no difference, I cannot deuise. I meruaile not (quoth he) that you be of this opinion. For you conceiue in your minde either none at all, or else a very false Image and similitude of this thing. But if you had beene with me in Tropia, and had presently seene their fashions and lawes, as I did, which liued there five yeares, and more, and would neuer haue come thence, but onely to make that new Land knowne here: Then doubtlesse you would grant, that you neuer saw people well ordered, but only there. Surely (quoth Master Peter) it shall be hard for you to make me beleue, that there is better order in that new Land, then is heere in the Countries that we know. For good wits be as well heere as there: and I thinke our Common-wealths be ancientser then theirs; wherein long vse and experience hath found out many things commodious for mans life; besides that many things heere among vs haue beene found by chance, which no wit could euer haue deuised. As touching the ancientnesse (quoth he) of common wealthes, then, you might better iudge if you had read the Histories and Chronicles of that land, which, if we may beleue, Cities were there, before men were heere. Now what thing soeuer hitherto by wit hath bin deuised, or found by chance, that might be as well there as heere. But I thinke verily, though it were so that we did passe them in wit: yet in studie, in trauell, and in labour some endeouor, they farre passe vs: For (as their Chronicles testifie) before our arrivall there they neuer heard any thing of vs, whom they call the Vltraequinoctialles: sauing that once about 1200 yeares

yeares agoe, a certaine ship was lost by the Ile of Vtopia, which was driuen thither by tempest. Certaine Romanes and Egyptians were cast on Land. Which after that neuer went thence. Marke now what profit they tooke of this one occasion through diligence and earnest trauaile. There was no craft nor science within the empire of Rome wherof any profit could rise, but they either learned it of these strangers, or else of them, taking occasion to search for it, found it out. So great profit was it to them that euer any went thither, from hence. But if any like chance before this hath brought any man from thence hither, that is as quite out of remembrance, as this also perchance in time to come shall be forgotten, that euer I was there. And like as they quickly, almost at the first meeting, made their owne, whatsoeuer is among vs wealthily deuised: so I suppose it would be long before we should receiue any thing, that among them is better instituted then among vs. And this I suppose is the chiefe cause why their Common-wealths be wiselyer gouerned, and doe flourish in more wealth then ours, though wee neither in wit nor riches be their inferiours. Therefore gentle Master Raphael (quoth I) I pray you and beseech you describe vnto vs the Island. And studie not to be short: but declare largely in order their Grounds, their Rivers, their Cities, their people, their maners, their ordinances, their lawes, and to be short, all things that you shall thinke vs desirous to know. And you shall thinke vs desirous to know whatsoeuer wee know not yet. There is nothing (quoth he) that I will doe gladlier. For all these things I haue fresh in minde: But the matter requireth leisure. Let vs goe in therefore (quoth I) to dinner, afterward we will bestow the time at our pleasure. Content (quoth he) be it. So we went in and dined. When dinner was done, we came into the same place againe, and sate vs downe vpon the same bench, commanding our seruants that no man should trouble vs. Then I and Master Peter Giles desired Master Raphael to performe his promise. Hee therefore seeing vs desirous and willing to hearken to him, when he had sate still and paused a little while, musing and bethinking himselfe, thus he began to speake.

The end of the first Booke.

THE

THE
SECOND BOOKE
OF THE COMMUNICATION OF RAPHAEL HYTHLODAY,
concerning the best State of a COMMON-WEALTH.
Containing the description of VTOPIA, with a large declaration of the politike government, and of all the good Lawes and

Orders of the same Iland.

THE Iland of Vtopia, containeth The sight and in breadth in the middle part fashion of the of it (for there it is broadest) new Iland 200. miles. Which breadth con- Vtopia. tinneth through the most part of the Land, sauing that by little it commeth in, and waxeth narrower towards both the endes : which fetching about a circuit or compasse of five hundred miles, doe fashion the whole Iland like to the new Moone. Betweene these two corners the Sea runneth in, diuiding them a sunder by the distance of a leauen miles or thereabouts, and there surmounteth into a large Sea, which by reason that the Land on euery side compasseth it about, and sheltreth it from

A place naturally fenced, needeth one garrison,

A politike device in the chaunging of land-markes.

The Island of Vtopia, so named of King Vtopus.

the windes, is not rough, nor mounteth uot with great waues, but almost floweth quietly, not much vnlike a great standing poole: and maketh well-neigh all the space within the belly of the Land in manner of a hauen: and to the great commoditie of the inhabitants, receiue in ships towards euery part of the Land. The fore-fronts or frontiers of the two corners, that which boordes and shelues, and what with rockes, be ieopardous and dangerous. In the middle distance betweene them both, standeth vp aboue the water a great rocke, which therefore it is nothing perilous because it is in sight. Vpon the top of this rocke is a faire and a strong tower builded, which they hold with a garrison of men. Other rockes there be lying hid vnder the water, which therefore be dangerous. The channels be knowne onely to themselves. And therefore it seldome chanceth that any stranger vnlesse he be guided by an Vtopian, can come into this hauen. In so much that they themselves could scarcely enter without ieopardie, but that their way is directed and ruled by certaine land markes standing on the shore. By turning, translating, and remouing the markes, into other places, they may destroy their enemies nauies, be they neuer so many. The out-side or vtter circuite of the land, is also full of hauens, but the landing is so surely fenced, what by nature, and what by workemanship of mens hands, that a few defenders may driue backe many armies. Howbeit as they say, and as the fashion of the place it selfe doth partly shew, it was not euer compassed about with the sea. But King Vtopus, whose name, as conquest, the Island, beareth: For before this time it was called Abraxa) which also brought the rude and wilde people to that excellent perfection in all good fashions, humanitie, and ciuill gentleness, wherein they now goe beyond all the people in the world: euen at his arriuing and entering vpon the land, fortwith obtaining the victorie, caused fiteene miles space of vplandish ground, where the sea had no passage, to be cut and digged vp. And so wrought wrought the Sea round about the Land. He set to this worke, not only the inhabitants of this Iland (because they should not thinke it done in contumely and despite) but also all his owne souldiours.

Thus the worke being diuided into so great a number ^{Many hands} of workemen, was with exceeding meruailous speede ^{make light} dispatched. Infomuch that the borderers, which at the first began to mocke, and to iest as the vaine enterprife, then turned their derision to meruaile at the successe, and to feare. There be in the Iland fiftie foure large and faire Cities, or shiere townes, agreeing altogether in one ^{Cities in Pro-} ^{similitude} ^{causeth con-} ^{cord,} ^{A meane di-} ^{stance between} ^{City and City.} tongue, in like maners, institutions, and lawes. They be ^{all} ^{set} ^{and} ^{situate} ^{alike,} and in all points fashioned alike, as farre forth as the place or plot suffereth.

Of these Cities, they that be nighest together be twentie foure miles asunder. Again, there is none of them distant from the next, aboue one daies iourney a foot. There come yearly to Amaurote, out of euery Citie, three old men wise and well-experienced, there to intreate and debate, of the common matters of the Land. For this Citie (because it standeth iust in the midst of the Iland, and is therefore most meete for the Ambassadors of all parts of the Realme) is taken for the chiefe and head Citie. The precincts and bounds of the shieres, be so commodiously appointed out, and set forth for the Cities, that none of the all hath of any side lesse then twentie miles of ground, and of some side also much more, as of that part where the Cities be of further distance a sunder. None of the Cities desire to enlarge the bounds and limits of their shieres. For they count themselves rather the good husband, then the owners of their lands. They haue in the Countrey in all parts of the shiere, houses, or farmes builded, well appointed and furnished with all sorts of instruments and tooles belonging to husbandrie. These houses be inhabited of the Citizens, which come thither to dwell by course. No household or farme in the Countrey hath fewer then fiftie persons men and women, besides two bond.

bondmen, which be all vnder the rule and order of the good man, and the good wife of the house, being both very sage, discrete, and auncient persons. And euery thirty farmes or families haue one head ruler, which is called a Philarche, being as it were a head Baylife. Out of euery one of these families or farmes, commeth euery yeare into the citie twentie persons, which haue continued two yeares before in the Countrey. In their place so many fresh be sent thither out of the Citie, who, of them that haue bene there a yeare already, and be therefore expert and cunning in husbandry, shall be instructed and taught. And they the next yeare shall teach other.

This order is vsed for feare that either scarcenesse of victuals, or some other like incommodie should chance, through lacke of knowledge: if they should be altogether new, and fresh, and vncexpert in husbandrie. This maner and fashio[n], of yearly changing and renewing the occupiers of husbandrie, though it be solemne and customably vsed, to thinke that no man shall be constrained against his will to continue long in that hard and sharpe kinde of life; yet many of them haue such a pleasure and delight in husbandrie, that they obtaine a longer space of yeares. These husbandmen, plough and till the ground, and breede vp cattell, and prouide and make ready wood, which they carrie to the Citie either by land or water, as they most conueniently. They bring vp a great multitude of pullein, and that by a meruzilous policie: for the hens doe not sit vpon the egges; but by keeping them in a certaine equall heat they bring life into them, and hatch them. The chickens, as soone as they become out of the shell, follow men and women in sted of the hennens. They bring vp very few horses: nor none, but very fierce ones: and that for none other vse or purpose, but only to exercise their youth in riding, and feates of Armes: For Oxen be put to all the labour of ploughing and drawing: which they grant not to be so good as horses at a sudden brunt, and (as we say) at a dead life; but yet they hold an opinion,

The duties of men of husbandrie.

A strange fashion in hatching and bringing vp of Pullein.

The vse of Horses.

The vse of Oxen.

nion, that Oxen will abide and suffer much more labour, paine and hardinesse, then Horses will. And they thinke that Oxen be not in danger and subiect vnto so many diseases, and that they be kept and maintained with much lesse cost and charge : and finally, that they be good for meat, when they be past labour. They sow corne only for bread. For their drinke is either Wine made of grapes, Bread and or else of apples, or peares, or else it is cleare water : and drinke. many times Meathe made of honey or licouresse sodde in water ; for thereof they haue great store. And though they know certainly (for they know it perfectly indeed) how much victuals the Citie with the whole Countrie or Shire round about it doth spend : yet they sows much more corne, and breede vp much more cattell, then serueth for their owne vse, parting the ouerplus among their borderers. Whatsoeuer necessary things be lacking in the Countrey, all such stufte they fetch out of the Citie : where without any exchange, they easily obtaine it of the Magistrates of the Citie. For euery moneth many of them goe into the Citie on the holiday. When their haruest day draweth neare, and is at hand, then the Phylarches, which be the head Officers and Bailifes of husbandrie, send word to the Magistrates of the Citie what number of haruest men is needfull to be sent to them out of the Citie. The which companie of haruest men being ready at the day appointed, almost in one faire day dispatcheth all the haruest worke.

A great discretion in sowing of corne.

Mutuell helpe quickly dispatched.

Of the Cities, and namely Amaurote.

As for their Cities, who so knoweth one of them, knoweth them all : they be all so like one to another, as farre forth as the nature of the place permitteth. I will describe to you one or other of them, for it skilleth not greatly which : but which rather then Amaurote ? Of them all, this is the worthiest and of
 I
 most

The discriptiō of Amaurote
the chiefe citie in Propia.

The discription of Anyder.

The very like in England in the Riuer of Thames,

Heerein also doth London agree with A-maurote.

most dignitie. For the residue knowledge it for the head citie, because there is the Counsell house. Nor to me any of them all is better beloued, as wherein I liued five whole yeares together: The Citie of Amaurote standeth vpon the side of a low hill, in fashion almost foure square. For the breadth of it beginneth a little beneath the top of the hill, and still continueth by the space of two miles, vntill it come to the riuer of Anyder. The length of it, which lieth by the riuers side, is somewhat more. The riuer of Anyder riseth foure and twentie miles aboute Amaurote out of a little spring. But being increased by other small Riuers and Brookes that runne into it, and among other, two somewhat big ones; before the Citie it is halfe a mile broad and further broader. And fortie miles beyond the citie it falleth into the Ocean sea. By all that space that lieth betweene the sea and the Citie, and certaine miles also aboute the Citie, the water ebbeth and floweth fixe houres together with a swift tide. When the Sea floweth in, for the length of thirtie miles, it filleth all the Anyder with salt water, and driueth backe the fresh water of the Riuer. And somewhat further, it changeth the sweetnesse of the fresh water with the saltnesse. But a little beyond that, the riuer waxeth sweet, and runneth foreby the Citie fresh and pleasant. And when the Sea ebbeth, and goeth back again, the fresh water followeth it almost euen to the very fall of the Sea. There goeth a bridge ouer the riuer, made not of piles or of timber, but of stone worke, with gorgious and substantiall Arches, at that part of the Citie that is farthest from the Sea: to the intent that ships may Passe along foreby all the side of the Citie without let. They haue also another riuer which indeed is not very great. But it runneth gently and pleasantly: For it riseth euen out of the same hill that the Citie standeth vpon, and runneth downe a slope through the midst of the Citie into Anyder.

And because it riseth a little without the Citie, the Amauricians haue inclosed the head spring of it, with strong

strong fences, and bulwarkes, and so haue ioyned it to the Citie. This is done to the intent that the water should not be stopped, nor turned away, or poisoned, if their enemies should chance to come vpon them. From thence the water is deriued and conueyed downe in channels of bricke diuers waies, into the lower parts of the Citie. Where that cannot be done, by reason that the place will not suffer it, there they gather the raine water in great cisternes, which doth them as good seruice. The Citie is compassed about with a high and thicke stone wall full of turrets and bulwarkes. A drie ditch, but deepe and broad, and ouer-growne with bushes, briers, and thornes, goeth about three sides or quarters of the Citie. To the fourth side the riuer it selfe serueth as a ditch. The streetes be appointed and set forth very commodious, and handsome, both for cariage and also against the windes. The houses be of faire and gorgious building, and on the streete side they stand ioyned together in a long row through the whole streete, without any partition or separation. The streetes be twentie foote broad. On the backe side of the houses through the whole length of the street, ly large Gardens inclosed round about with the backe part of the streetes. Euery house hath two doores, one into the streete, and a posterne doore on the backe side into the Garden. These doores be made with two leaues, neuer locked nor bolted, so easie to be opened, that they will follow the least drawing of a finger, and shut againe alone. Who so will, may goe in, for there is nothing within the houses that is priuate, or any mans owne. And euery tenth yeare they change their houses by lot. They set great store by their Gardens.

The vse of
fresh water.

The defence of towne walls.

Streetes.
Buildings and houses.

To euery dwelling house a garden place adioyning.

This geare smelleth of Plato his communitie.

In them they haue vine-yards, all maner of fruit, hearbs, and flowers, so plesant, so well furnished, and so finely kept, that I neuer saw thing more fruitfull, nor better trimmed in any place. Their study and diligence heere- in commeth not only of pleasure, but also of a certaine strife and contention that is betweene streete and streete, concerning the trimming, husbanding, and furnishing of their gardens : every man for his owne part. And verily you shall not lightly finde in all the Citie any thing, that is more commodious, either for the profit of the Citizens, or for pleasure. And therefore it may seeme that the first founder of the Citie minded nothing so much, as these gardens. For they say that King Vtopus himselfe, euen at the first beginning, appointed and drew forth the plat-forme of the Citie into this fashion and figure that it hath now, but the gallant garnishing, and the beautifull setting forth of it, whereunto he saw that one mans age would not suffice, that he left to his posteritie. For their Chronicles which they keepe written with all diligent circumspection, containing the Historie of 1760 yeares, euen from the first conquest of the Iland, record and witnesseth that the houses in the beginning were very low, and like homely cotages or poore shepheard houses, made at all aduentures of every rude peece of timber, that came first to hand, with mudde walls, and ridged roofes, thatched ouer with straw. But now the houses be curiously builded after a gorgeous and gallant sort, with three stories one ouer another. The out-sides of the walls be made either of hard flint, or of Plaster, or else of bricke, and the inner-sides be well strengthened with timberworke. The roofes be plaine and flat, couered with a certaine kinde of Plaster, that is of no cost, and yet so tempered that no fire can hurt or perish it, and withstandeth the violence of the weather better then any lead. They keepe the winde out of their windowes with glasse, for it is there much vsed, and some heere also with fine linnen cloath dipped in oyle or amber, and that for two commodities : For by this meanes more light commeth in, and the winde is better kept out.

Glased or can-uased windowes.

of

Of the Magistrates.

E Very thirtie families or farmes, choose them yearly an Officer, which in their old language is called the Siphogrant, and by a newer name, the Philarche. Euery ten Siphogrants, with all their thirtie families be vnder an Officer, which was once called the Tranibore, now the chiefe Philarche. Moreover as concerning the election of the Prince, all the Syphogrants, which be in number two hundred, first be sworn to choose him, whom they thinke most meete and expedient. Then by a secret election, they name Prince one of those foure, whom the people before named vnto them. For out of the foure quarters of the Citie there be foure chosen, out of euery quarter one, to stand for the election: which be put vp to the Councell. The Princes Office continueth all his life time, vnlesse he be deposed or put downe for suspicion of tyrannic. They choose the Tranibores yearly, but lightly they change them not. All the other Officers be but for one yeare. The Tranibores euery third day, and sometimes, if neede be, oftner come in to the Councell house with the Prince. Their counsell is concerning the Common-wealth. If there be any controuersies among the Commoners, which be very few, they dispatch and end them by and by. They take euery two Siphrogants to them in counsell, and euery day a new couple. And it is provided, that nothing touching the Common-wealth shall be confirmed and ratified, vnlesse it haue beene reasoned of and debated, three daies in the counsell before it be decreed. It is death to haue any consultation, for the Common-wealth out of the counsell, or the place of the common election. This statute, they say, was made to the intent, that the Prince and Tranibores, might not easily conspire together to oppresse the people by tyrannic, and to change the state of the Weale-publike. Therefore matters of great waight and

A Tranibore in the Vtopian tongue, signifieth a head or chiefe Peere. A meruillous strange fashion in choosing Magistrates.

Tyranny in a well ordered Weale publike vnto be abhorred.

States and controuersies betwene party & party forthwith to be ended, which now a daies of a set purpose be vnreasonably delaied.

Against bastie and rash decrees or statutes.

A custome worthie to be vsed these daies in our councels and parliaments:

importance be brought to the election house of the Siphogrants, which, open the matter to their families. And afterward, when they haue consulted among themselues, they shew their deuise of the counsell. Sometime the matter is brought before the counsell of the whole Iland. Furthermore this custome also the counsell vseth, to dispute or reason of no matter the same day that it is first proposed or put forth, but to deferre it to the next sitting of the counsell: Because that no man when he hath rashly there spoken that commeth to his tongues end, shall then afterward rather studie for reasons wherewith to defend and maintaine his first foolish sentence, then for the commoditie of the common-wealth: as one rather willing the harme or hinderance of the Weale publike, then any losse or diminution of his owne estimation. And as one that would be ashamed (which is a very foolish shame) to be counted any thing at the first ouer-seene in the matter. Who at the first ought to haue spoken rather wisely, then hastily, or rashly.

Of Sciences, Crafts, and Occupations.

Husbandry or tillage practised of all estates, which now adaies is reiect vnto a few of the basest sort.
Sciences or occupations should be learned for necessities sake, and not for the maintenance of riorous excesse and wanton pleasure,

Husbandrie is a Science common to them all in generall, both men and women, wherein they be all expert and cunning. In this they be all instructed euen from their youth: partly in their schooles with traditions and precepts, and partly in the country nigh the city, brought vp as it were in playing, not only beholding the vse of it, but by occasion of exercising there bodies practising it also. Besides husbandrie, which (as I said) is common to them all, euery one of them learneth one or other seuerall and particular science, as his owne proper craft. That is most commonly either cloath-working in wooll or flaxe, or masonarie, or the smiths craft, or the carpenters science: For there is none other occupatiō that any number to speak of doth vse there.

For

For their garments, which throughout all the Island bee of one fashion, (sauiug that there is a difference betweene the mans garment and the womans; betweene the married and the vnmarried) and this one continueth for euermore vnchaunged, seemely and comely to the eye, no let to the moouing and welding of the body, also fit-both for winter and summer: as for these garments (I say) euery family maketh their owne. But of the other foresaid craftes euery man learneth one. And not onely the men but also the women. But the women, as the weaker sort, be put to the easier craftes: as to worke wooll and flaxe. The more laboursome sciences bee committed to the men. For the most part, euery man is brought vp in his fathers craft. For most commonly they bee naturally thereto bent and inclined. But if a mans minde stand to any other, hee is by adoption but into a family of that occupation, which he doth most fantasie. Whom not onely his father, but also the Magestrate doe diligently looke to, that he bee put to a discrete and an honest house-holder. Yea, and if any person, when he hath learned one craft, be desirous to learne also another, he is likewise suffered and permitted. When he hath learned both, hee occupieth whether hee will: vnlesse the citie hath more neede of the one, then the other. The chiefe and almost the onely office of the Syphograutes is, to see and take heede, that no man sit idle: but that euery one applie his owne craft with earnest diligence. And yet for all that, not to be wearied from earely in the morning, to late in the euening, with continuall worke, like labouring and toying beasts. For this is worse then the miserable, and wretched condition of bondmen.

Samilitude in apparell.

No citizen without a science.

To what occupation euery one is naturally inclined, that let him learne.

Idle persons to be driuen out of the weale publique.

Which, neuerthelesse is almost euery where the life of workemen and artificers, sauiug in Utopia. For they diuiding the day and the night into twentie foure iust houres, appoint and assigne onely sixe of those houres to worke, before noone, vpon the which they goe straight to dinner, and after dinner, when they haue reasted two

A moderation in the labour and toyle of artificers.

houres, houres, then they worke three houres, and vpon that they goe to supper. About eight of the clocke in the euening (counting one of the clocke the first houre after noone) they goe to bed: eight houres they giue to sleepe. All the void time, that is betweene the houres of worke, sleepe, and meate, that they be suffered to bestow euery man as he liketh best himselfe. Not to the intent that they should mispend this time in riot, or sloathfulnesse, but being then licensed from the labour of their owne occupations, to bestow the time well and thriftily vpon some other Science, as shall please them: For it is a solemne custome there, to haue Lectures daily early in the morning, whereto be present, they only be constrained, that be namely, chosen and appointed to learning. Howbeit a great multitude of e-uery sort of people, both men and women goe to heare Lectures, some one and some another, as euery mans nature is inclined. Yet this notwithstanding, if any man had rather bestow this time vpon his owne occupation, as it chanceth in many, whose mindes rise not in the contemplation of any Science liberall) he is not letted, nor prohibited, but is also praised and commended, as profitable to the Common-wealth. After supper, they bestow one houre in play: in Summer, in their Gardens: in Winter, in their common Halls, where they dine and sup. There they exercise themselves in Musicke, or else in honest and wholsome communication. Dice-play, and such other foolish and pernicious games, they know not. But they vse two games, not much vnlike the Chess. The one is the batraile of numbers, wherein one number stealeth away another. The other is where vices fight with ver-tues, as it were in battle array, or a set Field. In the which game is very properly shewed, both the strife and discord, that the vices haue among themselves, and againe their vnitie and concord against vertues: And also what vices be repugnant to what vertues: with what power and strength they assaile them openly: by what wiles and subtiltie they assault them secretly: with what helpe and

The studie of good literature.

Playing after supper.

But nowadaies dice-play is the pastime of Princes.

Plaies of games also profitable.

aid

aide the vertues resist, and ouercome the puissance of the vices : by what craft they frustrate their purposes : and finally by what sleight or meanes the one getteth the victorie. But heere least you be deceiued, one thing you must looke more narrowly vpon. For seeing they bestow but fixe houres in worke, perchance you may thinke that the lacke of some necessary things hereof may ensue. But this is nothing so ; For that small time is not only enough, but also too much for the store and abundance of all things, that be requisite, either for the necessitie, or Th kindes of commoditie of life. The which thing you also shall sorts of idle perceiue, if you wey and consider with your selues how people. great a part of the people in other Countries liueth idle. First almost all women, which be the halfe of the whole Women. number : or else if the women be somewhere occupied, there most commonly in their stead the men beydle. Besides this how great and how ydle a company is there of Priests and religious men, as they call them ? put thereto Rich men and all rich men, specially all landed men, which commonly landed men. be called Gentlemen, and noblemen. Take into this number also their seruants : I meane all that flocke of stout Servingmen. bragging rushbucklers. Ioyne to them also sturdie and Sturdy and valiant beggars, cloaking their idle life vnder the colour valiant beggars. of some disease or sicknesse.

And truly you shall finde them much fewer then you thought, by whose labour all these things are wrought, that in mens affaires are now daily vsed and frequented. Now consider with your selfe, of these few that do work, how few be occupied, in necessary workes : For where Wonderfull money beareth all the swing, there many vaine and su-wittily spoken. perfluous occupations must needs be vsed to serue onely for riotous superfluitie, and vn honest pleasure : for the same multitude that now is occupied in worke, if they were diuided into so few occupations, as the necessarie vse of nature requireth, in so great plentie of things as then of necessity would ensue, doubtlesse the prices would be too little for the artificers to maintaine their liuings.

K

But

the poorer consume more wealth.

Not asmuch as the magistrates liue idly.

Onely learned men called to offices.

But if all these, that be now busied about vnprofitable occupations, with all the whole flocke of them that liue idly and sloathfully, which consume and waste euery one of them more of these things that come by other mens labour, then two of the workemen themselues doe: if all these (I say) were set to profitable occupations: you easily perceiue how little time would be enough, yea and too much to store vs with all things that may be requisite either for necessitie, or for commodity, yea or for pleasure, so that the same pleasure be true and naturall. And this in Vtopia the thing it selfe maketh manifest and plaine. For there in all the citie with the whole countrey, or shiere adioyning to it scarcely fise hundred persons of all the whole number of men & women, that be neither too olde nor too weake to worke, be licensed and discharged from labour. Among them be the Syphogrants (who though they be by the lawes exempt and priuiledged from labour) yet they exempt not themselues: to the intent they may the rather by their example to prouoke others to worke.

The same vacation from labour doe they also enioy, to whom the people perswaded by the commendation of the priests, and secret election of the Syphogrants, haue giuen a perpetuall licence, from labour to learning. But if any one of them prooue not according to the expectation and hope of him conceiued, he is forthwith plucked backe to the company of artificers. And contrariwise, and often it chanceth that a handicrafts man doth so earnestly bestow his vacant and spare houres in learning, and through diligence so profiteth therein, that he is taken from his handy occupation, and promoted to the company of the learned. Out of this order of the learned be chosen Ambassadors, Priests, Tranibores, and finally the prince himselfe. Whom they in their old tongue call Barzanes, and by a newer name, Adams.

Theresidue of the people being neither idle, nor yet occupied about vnprofitable exercises, it may bee easily iudged in how few houres how much good worke by them them may be done and dispatched, towards those things that I haue spoken off. This commoditie they haue also about other, that in the most part of necessary occupations they neede not so much worke, as other nations doe. For first of all the building or repairing of houses asketh euery where so many mens continuall labour, because that the vnthriftie heire suffereth the houses that his father builded, in continuance of time, to fall in decay. So that which he might haue vpholpen with little cost, his successor is constrained to build it again a new, to his great charge. Yea many times also the house that stood one man in much money: and another is of so nice & so delicate a minde, that he setteth nothing by it. And it being neglected, & therfore shortly falling into ruin, he buildeth vp another in an other place with no lesse cost and charge.

How to auoid
excessiue cost
in building.

But among the Vtopians, where all things be set in good order, and the Common-wealth in a good stay, it seldome chanceth, that they choose a new plot to build an house vpon. And they doe not onely finde speedie and quicke remedies for present faults: but also preuent them that be like to fall. And by this meanes their houses continue and last very long with little labour and small reparations, insomuch that these kinde of workemen sometimes haue almost nothing to doe. But that they be commanded to hew timber at home, and to square and trim vp stones, to the intent that if any worke chance, it may the speedilier rise. Now sir, in their apparell, marke (I pray you) how few workemen they need. First of all, whiles they be at worke, they be couered homely with leather, or skins, that will last seauen yeares. When they goe forth abroad, they cast vpon them a cloake, which hideth the other homely apparell. These cloakes throughout the whole Island, be all of one coulour, and that is the naturall colour of the wooll. They therefore doe not onely spend much woollen cloth, then is spent in other countries, but also the same standeth them in much lesse cost. But linnen cloath is made with lesse labour,

How to lessen the charge in apparell.

and is therefore had more in vse. But in linnen cloath on-ly whitenesse; in wollen, only clenlinesse is regarded. As for the smalnesse or finenesse of the thred, that is nothing passed for. And this is the cause wherefore in other places foure or fve cloath gownes of diuers colours, and as many silke coates be not enough for one man. Yea, and if he be of the dilicate and nice sort, tenne be too few: where as there one garment will serue a man most commonly two yeares: For why should he desire moe? seeing if he had them, he should not be the better hapt or couered from cold, neither in his apparell any whit the comlier. Wherefore, seeing they be all exercised in profitable occupations, and that few Artificers in the same crafts be sufficient: this is the cause that plentie of all things being among them, they doe sometimes bring forth an innumerable company of people to amend the high-waies, if any be broken. Many times also, when they haue no such worke to be occupied about, an open proclamation is made, that they shall bestow fewer houres in worke: For the Magistrates doe not exercise their citizens against their wills in vnneedfull labours. For why, in the institution of the Weale publike, this end is only and chiefly pretended and minded, that what time may possibly be spared from the necessary occupations and affaires of the Common-wealth, all that the Citizens should withdraw from the bodily seruice to the free libertie of the minde, and garnishing of the same. For herein they suppose the felicitie of this life to consist.

Of their lining, and mutuall conuersation together.

BUt now will I declare how the citizens vse themselves one to another: what familiar occupying and entertainment, there is among the people, and what fashion they vse in the distribution of euery thing. First, the Citie consisteth of families, the families families most commonly be made of kinreds. For the women when they be married at a lawfull age, they goe into their husbands houses.

But the male children, with all the whole male offspring continue still in their owne family, and be gouerned of the eldest and auncientest father, vnlesse he dote for age: for then the next to him in age, is placed in his roome. But to the intent the prescript number of the citizens should neither decrease, nor about measure increase; The number of Citizens. it is ordained that no family, which in euery Citie be fixe thousand in the whole, besides them of the Country, shall at once haue fewer children of the age of foureteen yeares or thereabout, then ten, or moe then sixteene; for of children vnder this age, no number can be prescribed or appointed. This measure or number is easily obserued and kept, by putting them that in fuller families be about the number into families of smaller increase. But if chance be that in the whole Citie, the store increase about the iust number, wherewith they fill vp the lacke of other Cities. But if so be that the multitude throughout the whole Island, passe and exceed the due number, then they choose out of euery Citie certaine Citizens, and build vp a town vnder their owne lawes in the next Land, where the inhabitants haue much waste and vnoccupied ground, receiuing also of the same Countrey people to them, if they will ioine and dwell with them. They thus ioyning and dwelling together doe easily agree in one fashion, of liuing, and that to the great wealth of both the peoples: For they so bring the matter about by their Lawes, that the ground which before was neither good nor profitable for the one nor for the other, is now sufficient and fruitfull enough for them both. But if the inhabitants of the land, will not dwell with them to be ordered by their lawes, then they driue them out of those bounds which they haue limited and appointed out for themselves.

And if they resist and rebell, then they make warre against them. For they count this the most iust cause of warre.

warre, when any people holdeth a piece of ground void and vacant to no good nor profitable vse, keeping other from the vse and possession of it, which notwithstanding by the law of nature ought thereof to be nourished and relieved. If any chance doe so much diminish the number of any of their Cities, that it cannot bee filled vp againe, without the diminishing of the iust number of the other Cities (which they say chanced but twise since the beginning of the Land, through a great pestilent plague) then they fulfill and make vp, the number with citizens fetched out of their owne forraigne townes, for they had rather suffer their forraigne townes to decay and perish, then any Citie of their owne Island to be diminished. But now againe to the conuersation of the Citizens among themselues.

So might we well be discharged and eased of the idle company of seruing
men.

The cause of concoufnesse
and extortion.

The eldest (as I said) ruleth the family. The wiues be ministers to their husbands, the children to their parents, and to be short the younger to their elders. Every Citie is diuided into foure equall parts or quarters. In the midst of every quarter, there is a market place of all maner of things. Thither the workes of every family be brought into certaine houses. And every kind of thing is layd vp seuerall in barnes or store houses. From hence the father of every family, or every housholder fetcheth whatsoeuer he and his haue neede off, and carieth it away with him without money, without exchange, without any gage, pawne, or pledge. For why should any thing be denied vnto him? seeing there is abundance of all things, and that it is not to bee feared, least any man will aske more then he needeth. For why should it bee thought that that man would aske more then enough, which is sure neuer to lack? Certainly in all kinds of liuing creatures, either feare of lacke doth cause couetousnes, and rauine, or in man onely pride, which counteth it a glorious thing to passe & excell other in the superfluous and vaine ostentation of things. The which kind of vice among the Vtopians can haue no place. Next to the market places that that I speake off, stand meate mar-kets : whether bee brought not onely all sorts of hearbes, and the fruits of trees, with bread, but also fish, and all manner of foure-footed Beasts, and wilde foule that be mans meat. But first the filthinesse and ordure thereof, is cleane washed away in the running Riuer without the Citie in places appointed meet for the same purpose. From thence the beasts be brought in killed, and cleane washed by the hands of their bondmen : for they permit not their free citizens to accustom themselves to the killing of beasts, through the vse wherof they thinke, clemency the gentlest affection of our nature by little & little, to decay & perish. Neither they suffer any thing that is filthie, loathsome, or vncleanly, to be brought into the Citie, lest the ayre by stench thereof infected and corrupt, should cause pestilent diseases. Moreouer euery streete hath certaine great large hals set in equall distance one from another, euery one knowne by a feuerall name. In these hals dwell the Syphogrants. And to euery one of the same halles, be appointed thirtie families, on either side fiftene. The stewards of euery hall, at a certaine houre come into the meat markets, where they receiue meate according to the number of their hals.

But first and chiefly of all, respect is had to the sicke, that be cured in the hospitals. For in the circuite of the Citie, a little without the wals, they haue foure hospitals, so big, so wide, so ample, and so large, that they may seeme foure little townes, which were deuised of that bignesse, partly to the intent the sick be they neuer so many in number, should not lye too throng or strait, and therefore vneasily, and incommodiously : and partly that they which were taken and holden with contagious diseases, such as be wont by infection to creep from one to another, might be laid a far from the companie of the residue. These hospitals be so well appointed, and with all things necessarie to health so furnished, & moreouer so diligent attendance

Of the slaughter of beasts we haue learned man-slaughter. Filth and ordure bring the infection of pestilence into Cities.

Care, diligence and attendance about the sick, through

through the continuall presence of cunning Physitians is giuen, that though no man be sent thither against his will, yet notwithstanding there is no sicke person in all the Citie, that had not rather lye there then at home at his owne house. When the steward of the sicke hath receiued such meates as the Physitians haue prescribed, then the best is equally diuided among the halls, according to the company of euery one, sauing there is had a respect to the Prince, the Bishop, the Traniböres, and to Ambassadors and all strangers, if there be any, which be very few and seldome. But they also when they be there, haue certaine seuerall houses appointed and prepared for them. To these halls at the set houres of dinner and supper, cometh all the whole Siphograntie or Ward, warned by the noise of a brazen Trumpet: except such as be sicke in the Hospitals, or else in their owne houses.

Euery man is at his liber-ti, so that no thing is done by compulsiö.

Howbeit, no man is prohibited or forbid, after the hals be serued to fetch home meate out of the Market to his owne house; for they know that no man will do it without a cause reasonable. For though no man be prohibited to dine at home, yet no man doth it willingly: because it is counted a point of small honestie. And also it were a folly to take the paine to dresse a bad dinner at home, when they may be welcome to good and fine fare so nigh hand at the hall. In this hall, all vile seruice, all flauerie, and drudgerie, with all laboursome toyle, and drudgerie, with all labourfome toyle, and base businesse, is done by bondmen. But the women of euery family by course haue the office and charge of cookerie for seething and dressing the meate, and ordering all things thereto belonging. They sit at three Tables or moe, according to the number of their companie. The men sit vpon the Bench next the wall, and the women against them on the other side of the table, and if any sudden euill should chance to them, as many times happeneth to women with childe, they may rise without trouble or disturbance of any bodie, and goe thence into the nurserie. The nurces sit se-

Women both dresse and serue the meat.

Nurces:

nerall

uerall alone with their young sucklings, in a certaine parlour appointed and deputed to the same purpose, neuer without fire and cleane water, nor yet without cradels, that when they will they may lay downe the yong infants, and at their pleasure take them out of their swathing cloathes, and hold them to the fire, and refresh them with play. Euery mother is nurse to her owne childe, vnlesse either death, or sicknesse be the let. When that chanceth, the wiues of the Syphogrants quickly prouide a nurse. And that is not hard to be done. For they that can doe it, proffer themselues to no seruice so gladly as to that. Because that there this kind of peece is much prayfed: and the childe that is nourished, euer after, taketh his nurse for his owne naturall mother. Also among the nurses, sit all the children that bee vnder the age of fiue yeares. All the other children of both kinds, as well boyes as girls, that be vnder the age of mariage, doe either serue at the tables, or else if they be too yong thereto, yet they stand by with meruailous silence. That which is giuen to them from the table they eate, and other seuerall dinner time they haue none. The Syphogrant and his wife sit in the midst of the high Table, for as much as that is counted the honourablest place, and because from thence all the whole company is in their sight. For that table standeth ouer thwart the ouer end of the hall. To them be ioyned two of the auncientest and eldest. For at euery table they sit foure at a messe. But if there be a Church standing in that Syphograntie, or ward, then the Priest and his Wife sitteth with the Syphogrant, as chiefe in the company. On both sides of them sit yong men, and next vnto them againe, old men. And thus throughout all the house, equall of age be set together, and yet be mixt and matched with vnequall ages.

This, they say, was ordeined, to the intent that the sage grauity and reuerence of the elders should keepe the yongers from wanton licence of words and behauiour. For as much as nothing can be so secretly spoken or done at

L

the

Nothing sooner prouokeith men to well doing then praise and commendation.

The education of yong children.

The yong mixed with their elders.

Old men regarded and reuerenced.

This now adaies is obserued in our V-niuersitie.
Talke at Table.

This is repugnant to the opinion of our Physitions.
Musicke at the table.

Pleasure without harme, not commendable.

the table, but either they that sit on the one side or on the other, must needs perceiue it. The dishes bee not sette downe in order from the first place, but all the old men (whose places be marked with some speciall token to be knowne) be first serued of their meate, and then the residue equally. The old men, diuide their dainties as they thinke best to the yonger on each side of them. Thus the elders be not defrauded of their due honour, and neuertheless equall commodie commeth to euery one. They begin euery dinner and supper of reading something that pertaineth to good manners and vertue. But it is short, because no man shall be greued therewith. Heereof the elders take occasion of honest communication, but neither sad nor vnpleasant. Howbeit they doe not spend all the whole dinner time themselues, with long and tedious talke, but they gladly heare also the yong men: yea, and purposely prouoke them to talke, to the intent that they may haue a prooofe of euery mans wit, and towardnesse, or disposition to vertue, which commonlie in the libertie of feasting doth shewe and vtter it selfe. There dinners be very short: but their suppers be somewhat longer, because that after dinner followeth labour, after supper, sleepe and naturall rest, which they thinke to be of more strength and efficacie to wholsome and healthfull digestion. No supper is passed without Musicke. Nor their banquets want no conceits, nor iunkets. They burne sweet gummes and spices or perfumes, and pleasant smells, and sprinkle about sweet ointments and waters, yea, they haue nothing vndone that maketh for the cherishing of the company. For they be much enclined to this opinion: to thinke no kinde of pleasure forbidden, whereof commeth no harme. Thus therefore, and after this sort they liue together in the Citie, but in the Countrie they that dwell alone farre from any neighbours, doe dine at home in their owne houses: For no family there lacketh any victuals, as from whom commeth all that the Citizens eat and liue by.

musick at table.

Of their iourneying or tranelling abroad, with diners other matters cunningly reasoned, and Wittily discussed.

BUt if any be desirous to visite either their friends dwelling in another citie, or to see the place it selfe, they easily obtayne licence of their Syphogrants and Tranibores, vnlesse there be some profitable let. No man goeth out alone but a companie is sent forth together with their Princes letters, who doe testifie that they haue licence to goe that iourney, and prescribeth also the day of their returne.

They haue a waine giuen them, with a common bondman, which driueth the oxen, and taketh charge of them. But vnlesse they haue women in their Companie, they fend home the waine againe, as an impediment and let. And though they carry nothing forth with them, yet in all their iourney they lacke nothing. For wherefoeuer they come, they be at home. If they tary in a place longer then one day, then there euery one of them falleth to his owne occupation, and be very gently entertaied of the workemen and companies of the same crafts. If any man of his owne head and without leaue, walke out of his precinct and bounds, taken without the Princes letters, he is brought againe for a fugitiue, or a run away with great shame and rebuke, and is sharply punished. If he be taken in that fault againe, he is punished with bondage. If any be desirous to walke abroad into the fields, or into the Countrey that belongeth to the same Citie that he dwelleth in, obtaining the good will of his father, and the consent of his wife, he is not prohibited. But into what part of the Countrey soeuer he commeth, he hath no meat giuen him vntill he haue wrought out his forenoons task, or dispatched so much worke, as there is wont to be wrought before supper. Obseruing this law & condition, he may go whether he will within the bounds of his

O holy common wealth, and of Christians to be followed.

Equalitie is the cause that every man hath enough.

A common wealth is nothing else but a great household.

The traffique and marchandise of the Vropians.

owne Citie. For he shall be no lesse profitable to the City, then if he were within it. Now you see how little libertie they haue to loyter: how they can haue no cloake or pretence to Idleneffe. There be neither wine tauerns, nor ale-houses, nor stewes, nor any occasion of vice or wickednesse, no lurking corners, no places of wicked counsailes or vnlawfull assemblies, but they be in the present sight, and vnder the eyes of every man. So that of necessitie they must either apply their accustomed labours, or else recreate themselves with honest and laudable pastimes.

This fashion and trade of life, being vsed among the people, it cannot be chosen, but that they must of necessitie haue store and plentie of all things. And seeing they be all thereof parteners equally, therefore can no man there be poore or needy. In the counsell of Amaurot, whither as I said, every Citie sendeth three men a peece yearly, as soone as it is perfectly knowne of what things there is in every place plentie, and againe what things be scant in any place, incontinent the lacke of the one, is performed and filled vp with the abundance of the other. And this they doe freely without any benefit, taking nothing againe of them, to whom the things is giuen, but those Cities that haue giuen of their store to any other Citie, that lacketh, requiring nothing againe of the same Citie, doe take such things as they lacke of another Citie, to the which they gaue nothing. So the whole lland is as it were one familie, or householde. But when they haue made sufficient prouision of store for themselves (which they thinke not done, vntill they haue prouided for two yeares following, because of the vncertaintie of the next yeares prooffe) then of those things, whereof they haue abundance, they carrie forth into other countries great plenty: as grayne, honey, woll, flax, woode, madder, purple died felles, waxe, tallowe, leather, and liuing beasts. And the seauenth part of all these things they giue franckly and freely to the poore of that countrie. The residue they sell at a reasonable and and meane price. By this meanes

of

of traffique or marchandise, they bring into their owne countrey, not onely great plentie of gold and siluer, but also all such things as they lacke at home, which is almost nothing but Iron. And by reason they haue long vsed this trade, now they haue more aboundance of these things, then any man will beleeeue.

Now therefore they care not whether they sell for ready money, or else vpon trust to be payde at a day, and to haue the most part in debts. But in so doing they neuer follow the credence of priuate men: but the assurance or warrantise, of the whole citie, by instruments and writings made in that behalfe accordingly. When the day of payment is come and expired, the citie gathereth vp the debt of the priuate debtours, and putteth it into the common boxe, and so long hath the vse and profit of it, vntill the Vtopians their creditours demaund it. The most part of it, they neuer aske. For that thing which is to them is no profit to take it from other, to whom it is profitable, they thinke it no right nor conscience. But if the case so stand, that they must lend part of that money to another people, then they require their debt: or when they haue warre. For the which purpose onely, they keepe at home all the treasure which they haue, to be holpen and succoured by it either in extreame ieopardies, or in suddaine dangers. But especially and chiefly to hire therewith, and that for vnrasonable great wages, strange souldiours. For they had rather put strangers in ieopardie, then their owne countrey men: knowing that for money enough, their enemies themselves many times may be bought and sold, or else through treason be set together by the eares, among themselves. For this cause they keepe an inestimable treasure. But yet not as a treasure: but so they haue it, and vse it, as in good faith I am ashamed to shew: fearing that my words shall not be beleeued. And this I haue more cause to feare, for that I know how difficultie and hardly I my selfe would haue beleeued another man telling the same, if I had not presently seene it with mine eyes.

In all things and aboue al things, to the communitie they haue an eye.

By what policie money may be in lesse estimation.
It is better either with money or by politic to a-uoid warre then with much losse of mans blood to fight.

O fine wit.

For it must needs be, that how farre a thing is dissimilar and disagreeing, from the guise and trade of the hearers, so farre shall it be out of their beleefe. Howbeit, a wise and indifferent esteemer of things, will not greatly meruaile perchance, seeing all their other lawes and customes doe so much differ from ours, if the vse also of gold and siluer among them be applied, rather to their owne fashions, then to ours. I meane in that they occupie not money themselves, but keepe it for that chance, which as it may happen, so it may be, that it shall neuer come to passe. In the meane time, gold and siluer, whereof money is made, they doe so vse, as none of them doth more esteeme it, then the very nature of the thing deserueth.

Gold worse
then yron as touching the necessarie vse thereof.

And then who doth not plainly see, how far it is vnder Iron: as without the which men can no better liue then without fire and water. Whereas to gold and siluer, nature hath giuen no vse, that we may not well lacke: if that the folly of men had not set it in higher estimation for the rarenesse sake. But of the contrary part, nature as a most tender and louing mother, hath placed the best and necessarie things open abroad: as the ayre, the water, and the earth it selfe. And hath remoued and hid farthest from vs vaine and vnprofitable things. Therefore if these metals, among them should be fast locked vp in some Tower, it might be suspected, that the Prince and the Councell (as the people is euer foolishly imagining) intended by some subtiltie to deceiue the Commons, and to take some profit of it to themselves. Furthermore if they should make thereof plate, & such other finely and cunningly wrought stuffe, if at any time they should haue occasion to breake it, and melt it againe, therewith to pay their souldiours wages, they see and perceiue very well, that men would be loth to part from those things, that they once began to haue pleasure and delight in. To remedie all this they haue found out a meanes, which as it is agreeable to all their other lawes and customes, so it is from ours, whete

gold

gold is so much set by, and so diligently kept, very farre discrípant and repugnant: and therefore vncredible, but only to them that be wise. For whereas they eate and drinke in earthen and glasse vessels, which indeed be curiously and properly made, and yet be of very finall value: of gold and siluer, they make chamber-pots, and other vessels that serue for most vile vses; not only in their common hals, but in euery mans priuate house. Furthermore of they same mettals they make great chaines, fetters, and gyues, wherein they tie their bond-men.

Finally, whoeuer for any offence be infamed, by their eares, hangrings of gold: vpon their fingers they weare rings of gold: and about their neckes chaines of gold: and in conclusion their heads be tied with gold.

Thus by all meanes possible they procure to haue gold and siluer among them in reproach and infamie. And these mettals, which other nations doe as grievously and sorrowfully forgoe, as in a maner their owne liues: if they should altogether at once be taken from the Vtopians, no man there would think that he had lost the worth of one farthing. They gather also pearles by the sea side, and Diamonds and Carbuncles vpon certaine Rockes, and yet they seeke not for them: but by chance finding them, they cut and polish them. And therewith they deck their yong infants. Which like as in the first yeares of their childe hood, they make much, and be fond and proud of such ornaments, so when they be a little more growne in yeares and discretion, perceiuing that none but children doe weare such toies and trifles: they lay them away euen of their owne shamefastenesse, without any bidding of their parents: euen as our children, when they waxe big, doe cast away nuttes, brouches, and puppets. Therefore these lawes and customes, which be so farre different from all other nations, how diuers fantasies also and minds they doe cause, did I neuer so plainly perceiue, as in the Ambassadors of the Anemolians.

These Ambassadors came to Amaurote, whiles I was

O wonderfull contumely of gold.

Gold the re-proachfull badge of infamed persons.

Gemmies and precious stones, toyes for yong children to play withall.

A very pleasant tale.

was there. And because they came to intreate of great and weightie matters, those three Citizens a peece out of euery Citie, were come thither before them. But all the Ambassadors of the next Countries, which had bene there before, and knew the fashions and maners of the Vtopians, among whom they perceiued no honour giuen to sumptuous apparell, silkes to be contemned, gold also to be infamed and reproachfull, were wont to come thither in very homely and simple array. But the Anemolians because they dwell farre thence, and had very little acquaintance with them, hearing that they were all apparelled alike, and that very rudely and homely, thinking them not to haue the things which they did not weare: being therefore more proud, then wise, determined in the gorgiounesse of their apparell to represent very gods, and with the bright shining and glistering of their gay cloathing, to dazell the eyes of the silly poore Vtopians.

So there came in foure Ambassadors with one hundred seruants, all apparellled in changeable colours: the most of them in silkes: rhe Ambassadors themselues (for at home in their owne Countrie they were noble men) in cloath of gold, with great chaines of gold, with gold hanging at their eares, with gold rings vpon their fingers, with brouches and aglets of gold vpon their caps, which glistered full of pearles and precious stones: to be short, trimmed and adorned with all those things, which among the Vtopians were either the punishment of bondmen, or the reproach of infamed persons, or else trifles for yong children to play withall. Therefore it would haue done a man good at his heart, to haue seene how proudly they displayed their peacocks feathers, how much they made of their painted sheathes, and how loftily they set forth and aduanced themselues, when they compared their gallant apparell, with the poore raiment of the Vtopians. For all the people were swarmed forth into the streetes.

And

And on the other side, it was no lesse pleasure to consider how much they were deceiued, and how farre they missed of their purpose being contrary waies taken, then they thought they should haue beene. For to the eyes of all the Vtopians, except verie few, which had beene in other countries, for some reasonable cause, all that gorgiousnesse of apparell, seemed shamefull and reproachfull. Insomuch that they most reuerently saluted the vilest and most abiect of them for lords: iudged them by their wearing of golden chaines to bee bondmen. Yea you should haue fine children also, that had cast away thier pearles and precious stones, when they saw the like sticking vpon the Ambassadors cappes: digge and push their mothers vnder the sides, saying thus to them. Looke mother how great lubber doth yet weare pearles, and precious stones, as though he were a little child still. O wittie head.

But the mother, yea, and that also in good earnest: peace sonne, saith she: I thinke he be some of the Ambassadors fooles. Some found fault at their golden chaines, as to no vse nor purpose, being so small and weake, that a bondman might easily breake them, and againe so wide and large, that when it pleased him, hee might cast them off, and runne away at libertie whither he would. But when the Ambassadors had beene there, a day or two, and saw so great abundance of gold so lightly esteemed, yea in no lesse reproach, then it was with them in honour: and besides that, more gold in the chaines and gifts of one fugitiue bondman, then all the costly ornaments, of them three was worth: they began to abate their courage, and for Doubtfull, hee very shame laid away all that gorgious array, whereof calleth it, they were so proud. And specially when they had talked either in consideration and respect of counterfeited stones, or else he calleth doubtfull very little worth. familiarly with the Vtopians, and had learned all their fashions and opinions. For they meruaile that any men be so foolish, as to haue delight and pleasure in the doubtfull glistering of a little trifeling stone, which may behold any of the starres, or else the sunne it selfe.

Or that any man is so madde, as to count himselfe the M nobler

A true saying and a witty.

nobler for the smaller or finer threed of wooll, which selfe same wooll (be it now in neuer so fine spunne threed) a sheepe did once weare: and yet was shee all that time no other thing then a sheepe. They meruaile also that gold, which of the owne nature, is a thing so vnprofitable, is now among all people in so high estimation, that man himselfe, by whom yea and for the vse of whom it is so much set by, is in much lesse estimation, then the gold it selfe. Infomuch, that a lumpish block-head churle, and which hath no more wit then an asse, yea and as full of naughtinesse, as of folly, shal haue neuerthelesse many wise and good men in subiection and bondage, only for this, because he hath a great heape of gold.

Which if it should be taken from him by any fortune, or by some subtil wyle and cautle of the Law, (which no lesse then fortune doth both raise vp the low, and plucke downe the high) and be giuen to the most vile slaue and abiect driuell or all his household, then shortly after he shall goe into the seruice of his seruant, as an augmentation, or ouer-plus beside his money.

How much more wit is in the heads of the Vropians, then of the common sort of Christians.

But they much more meruaile at and detest the madnesse of them, which to those rich men, in whose debt and danger they be not, doe giue almost diuine honours, for none other consideration, but because they be rich: and yet knowing them to be such niggish penny-fathers, that they be sure as long as they liue, not the worth of one farthing of that heape of gold, shall come to them. These and such like opinions haue they conceiued, partly by education, being brought vp in that Common-wealth, whose lawes and customes be farre different from those kindes of folly, and partly by good literature and learning. For though there be not many in euery Citie, which be exempt and discharged of all other labours, and appointed onely to learning, that is to say: such in whom euen from their very child-hood they haue perceiued a singuler towardnesse, a fine wit, and a minde apt to good learning: yet all in their child-hood be instructed in learning. And the better part of the people, both men & women through out all their whole life, doe bestow in learning those spare houres, which we said they haue vacant from bodily labours. They be taught learning in their owne native tongue. For it is both copious in words, and also pleasant to the eare: and for the vtterance of a mans mind verie perfect and sure. The most part of all that side of the world, vseth the same language, sauing that among the Vtopians it is finest and purest, and according to the diuersitie of the Countries, it is diuersly altered. Of all these Philosophers, whose names be here famous in this part of the world to vs knowne, before our comming thither, not as much as the fame of any of them was come among them. And yet in Musique, Logique, Arithmetique, and Geometrie, they haue found out in a manner all that our ancient Philosophers haue taught. But as they in all things be almost equall to our old and ancient clarks; so our new Logicians in subtil inuentions, haue far passed and gone beyond them.
the

The studies among the Vtopians.

Musique.
Logique.
Arithmetique.
Geometrie.

For they haue not deuised one of all those rules, of restrictions, amplifications, very wittily inuented in the small Logicals, which heare our children in euery place doe learne. Furthermore they were neuer yet able to find out the second inuentions: insomuch that none of them could euer see man himselfe in common, as they call him, though he be (as you know) bigger then euer was any giant, yea & pointed to of vs euen with our finger. But they be in the course of the stars, & the moouings of the heauenly spheares very expert & cunning. They haue also wittily excogitated and deuised instruments of diuers fashions: wherein is exactly cōprehended & contained the moouings and scituations of the sun, the moon, & of al the other stars, which appeare in their horizon. But as for the amities and dissentions of the planets, & all that deceitfull diuination of the stars, they neuer as much as dreamed thereof. Rains, winds, & other courses of tempests, they know before by certaine tokens, which they haue learned by long vse and obseruation.

In this place seemeth to be a nipping taunt.

Astronomie:

Yet among Christians this geere is highly esteemed in these daies.

INaturall Philosophie is a knowledge most vncertaine.

Morall philosophie.

The order of good things.

The ends of good things.

The Vtropians hold opinion that felicity consisteth in honest pleasure.

The principles of philosophie grounded vpon religion.

The theologie of the Vtropians.

The immortalitye of the soule, whereof these daies certain christians be doubtfull.

observation. But of the causes of all these things, and of the ebbing, and flowing, and saltnesse of the sea, and finally of the originall beginning, and nature of heauen and of the world, they hold partly the same opinions that our old Philosophers hold, and partly as our Philosophers vary among themselves, so they also, whiles they bring new reasons of things, doe disagree from all them, and yet among themselves in all points they doe not accord. In that Philosophie, which intreateth of manners and vertue, their reasons and opinions agree with ours. They dispute of the good qualities of the soule, of the bodie, and of fortune. And whether the name of goodnesse may be applied to all these, or onely to the endowments and gifts of the soule. They reason of vertue and pleasure. But the chiefe and principal question is in what thing, be it one or mo the felicitie of man consisteth. But in this point they seeme almost too much giuen and inclined to the opinion of them, which defend pleasure, wherein they determine either all or the chiefe part of mans felicitie to rest. And (which is more to be marueiled at) the defence of this so daintie and delicate an opinion, they fetch euen from their graue, sharpe, bitter, and rigorous religion. For they neuer dispute of felicitie or blessednesse, but they ioyne vnto the reasons of Philosophie certain principles taken out of religion: without the which, to the inuestigation of true felicitie, they thinke reason of it selfe weake and vnperfect. Those principles be these and such like. That the soule is immortal: & by the bountifull goodnes of God ordained to felicitie. That to our vertues & good deeds, rewards be appointed after this life, & to our euill deedes punishments. Though these be pertaining to religion, yet they thinke it meete that they should be beleued & granted by proues, of reason. But if these principles were condemned and disanulled, then without any delay, they pronounce no man to be so foolish, which would not doe all his diligence and endeour to obtaine pleasure be it right or wrong, only auoiding this inconuenience, that the lesse pleasure pleasure should not be a let or hinderance to the bigger : or that he laboured not for that pleasure , which would bring after it displeasure, grieve, and sorrow.

For they iudge it extreame madnesse to follow sharpe and painfull vertue, and not only to banish the pleasure of life, but also willingly to suffer grieve, without any hope of profit thereof ensuing. For what profit can there be, if a man, when he hath passed ouer all his life vnpleasantly, that is to say, miserably, shall haue no reward after his death ? But now sir, they thinke not felicitie to rest in all pleasure, but only in that pleasure that is good and honest, and that hereto, as to perfect blessednesse our nature is allured and drawne euen of vertue, whereto only they that be of the contrarie opinion doe attribute felicitie. For they define vertue to be life ordered according to nature, and that we be hereunto ordained of God. And that he doth follow the course of nature, which in desiring and refusing things is ruled by reason. Furthermore, the reason doth chiefly and principally kindle in men the loue and veneration of the diuine Maiestie. Of whose goodnesse it is that we be, and that we be in possibilitie to attaine felicitie. And that secondarily it both stirreth and prouoketh vs to lead our life out of care in ioy and mirth; and also moueth vs to help and further all other in respect of the societie of nature to obtaine and enioy the same.
For there was neuer man so earnest and painfull a follower of vertue and hater of pleasure, that would so en-ioyne your labours, watchings, and fastings, but he would also exhort you to ease, lighten, relieue, to your power, the lack and misery of others, praising the same as a deed of humanitie, and pittie. Then if it be a point of humanity, for man to bring health and comfort to man, and specially (which is a vertue most peculiarly belonging to man) to mitigate and assuage the grieve of others, and by taking from them the sorrow and heauinesse of life to restore them to ioy, that is to say to pleasure : which may it not then be said, that nature doth prouoke euery man to doe

As euery pleasure ought not to be imbraced, so grieve is not to be pursued but for vertues sake.

In this definition of vertue they agree with the Stoycians,

The work and effect of reason in man.

But now a daies some there be that willingly pro-care vnto themselves painfull griefes, as though there in rested some high point of religion, where as rather the religiously disposed person, if they happen to him either by chance or else by natural necessitie ought patiently to receiue and suffer them.

Bargaines and lawes.

the same to himselfe? For a ioyfull life, that is to say, a pleasant life is either euill: and if it be so, then thou shouldest not onely helpe no man thereto, but rather, as much as in thee lieth, withdraw all men from it, as noysome and hurtfull, or else if thou not onely must, but also of dutie art bound to procure it to others? why not chiefly to thy selfe? To whom thou art bound to shew as much fauour and gentlenesse as to other. For when nature biddeth thee to be good and gentle to other, she commandeth thee not to be cruell and vngentle to thy selfe. Therefore euen very nature (say they) prescribeth to vs a ioyfull life, that is to say, pleasure as the end of all our operations. And they define vertue to be life ordred according to the prescript of nature. But in that, that nature doth allure and prouoke men one to helpe another to liue merrily (which surely she doth not without a good cause: for no man is farre aboue the lot of mans state, or condition, that nature doth carke and care for him onely, which equally fauourerh all, that he comprehended vnder the communion of one shape, so me and fashion) verily she commandeth them to vse diligent circumspection, that thou doe not seeke for thine owne commodities, that thou procure others incommodities. Wherefore their opinion is, that not onely couenants and bargaines made among priuate men, ought to be well and faithfully followed, obserued, and kept, but also common lawes, which either a good prince hath iustly published, or else the people neither oppressed with tyrannie, neither deceiued by fraude and guile, hath by their common consent constituted and ratified, concerning the petition of the commoditie of life, that is to say, the matter of pleasure.

These lawes not offended, it is wisdom, that thou looke to thine owne wealth. And doe the same for the common wealth is no lesse then thy dutie, if thou bearest any reuerent loue, or any naturall zeale and affection to thy natiue country. But to goe about to let another man of his pleasure, whiles thou procurest thine owne, that is open open wrong. Contrariwise, to with-draw something from thy selfe to giue to other, that is a point of humanitie, and gentlenesse: which neuer taketh away so much commoditie, as it bringeth againe. For it is recompenced with the returne of benefits, and the conscience of the good deed, with the remembrance of the thankfull loue and beneuolence of them, to whom thou hast done it, doth bring more pleasure to thy minde, then that which thou hast with-holden from thy selfe could haue brought to thy body. Finally (which to a godly disposed and a religious mind is easie to be perswaded) God recompenseth the gift of a short and small pleasure with great and euerlasting ioy.

The mutuall recourse of kindnesse.

Therefore the matter diligently weyed, and considered, thus they thinke, that all our actions, and in them the vertues themselves, be referred at the last to pleasure, as their end and felicitie. Pleasure they call euery motion, and state of the body or minde, wherein man hath naturally delectation. Appetite they ioyne to nature, and that not without a good cause. For like as, not only the senses, but also right reason coueteth whatsoeuer is naturally pleasant, so that it may be gotten without wrong or iniurie, not letting or debarring a greater pleasure, nor causing painfull labour, euen so those things that men, by vaine imagination doe faine against nature to be pleasant (as though it lay in their power to change the things, as they doe the names of things) all such pleasures they beleeue to be of so small helpe and furtherance to felicitie, that they count them a great let and hinderance. Because that in whom they haue once taken place, all his minde they possesse with a false opinion of pleasure. So that there is no place left for true and naturall delectations.

False & counterfeit pleasures.

For there be many things, which of their owne nature containe no pleasantnesse: yea the most part of them much grieue and sorrow. And yet through the peruerse and malicious flickering inticements of leaude and honest

The error of them that e-steeme themselues the more for apparels fake.

honest desires, be taken not onely for speciall and souraigne pleasures, but also be counted among the chiefe causes of life. In this counterfeit kinde of pleasure, they put them that I spake of before. Which the better gownes they haue on, the better men they thinke themselues. In the which thing, they doe twise erre. For they be no lesse deceiued, in that they thinke their gown the better then then they be, in that they thinke themselues the better.

Foolish honours.

For if you consider the profitable vse of the garment, why should wooll of a finer spunne threed, be thought better, then the wooll of a course spunne threed? Yet they, as though the one did passe the other by nature, and not by their mistaking, aduance themselues, and thinke the price of their owne persons thereby greatly increased.
And therefore the honor, which in a course gowne they durst not haue looked for, they require, as it were of du-tie, for their finer gownes sake. And if they be passed without reuerence, they take it displeasantly and disdain-fully. And againe, is it not a like madnesse to take a pride in vaine and vnprofitable honors? For what naturall or true pleasure dost thou take of an other mans bare head, or bowed knees; Will this ease the paine of thy knees, or remedie the phrensie of thy head? In this image of counterfeit pleasure, they be of meruailous madnesse, which for the opinion of nobilitie, reioyce much in their owne conceit. Because it was their fortune to come of such ancestours, whose stock of long time had been counted rich (for now nobilitie is nothing else) specially rich in lands. And though their ancestours left them not one foot of land, or else they themselues haue pissed it against the walls, yet they thinke themselues not the lesse noble therefore of one haire. In this number also they count them that take pleasure and delight (as I said) in gemmes and precious stones, and thinke themselues almost gods, if they chance to get an excellent one, specially of that kinde, which in that time of their owne Countrey men, is had in highest estimation.

Pleasure in precious stones most foolish.

For

For one kinde of stone keepeth not his price still in all countries, and at all times. Nor they buy them not, but taken out of the gold, and bare, no, nor so neither, vntill they haue made the seller to sweare, that hee will warrant and assure it to be a true stone, and no counterfeite gemme. Such care they take least a counterfeite stone should deceiue their eyes in stead of a right stone. But why shouldst thou not take euen as much pleasure in beholding a counterfeite stone, which thine eye cannot discern from a right stone? They should both be of like value to thee, euen as to the blinde man.

The opinion and fanſie of people doth augment and diminiſh the price and estimation of precious
ſtones.
Beholders of treasure, not occupying the ſame.

What ſhall I ſay of them, that keepe ſuperfluous riches, to take delectation onely in the beholding, and not in the vſe or occupying thereof? Doe they take true pleaſure, or elſe be they deceiued with falſe pleaſure? Or of them that be in a contrary vice, hiding the gold which they ſhall ne- uer occupie, nor peraduenture neuer ſee him more? And whiles they take care leaſt they ſhall leeſe, doe leeſe it in- deeſe. For what is it elſe, when they hide it in the ground, taking it both from their owne vſe, and perchance from al other mens alſo? And yet thou, when thou haſt hid thy treasure, as one out of all care, hopeſt for ioy. The which A pretie ſciti- on and wittie. treasure, if it ſhould chance to be ſtolen, and thou igno- rant of the theft, ſhouldeſt die ten yeares after: all that ten yeares thou liueſt after thy money was ſtolen, what mat- ter was it to thee, whether it had bene taken away or elſe ſafe as thou leſteſt it? Truely both wayes like profit came to thee. To theſe ſo fooliſh pleaſures they ioyne dicers, whoſe madneſſe they know by heareſay, and not by vſe. Hunters alſo, and hawkers.

Hiders of treasure.

For what pleaſure is there (ſay they) in caſting the dice vpon a table. Which thou haſt done ſo often, that if there were any pleaſure in it, yet the oft vſe might make thee wearie thereof? Or what delight can there bee, and not rather diſpleaſure in hearing the barking and howling of dogs? Or what greater pleaſure is there to be felt, when a dogge followeth an hare, then when a dogge fol- loweth

Dice play.

Hunting and hawking.

710 Sportsmen.

against field sports

Hunting the basest part of boucherie among the V-topians, and yet this is now in the exercise of most noble
men.

loweth a dogge? for onething is done in both, that is to say, running, if thou hast pleasure therein. But if the hope of slaughter, and the expectation of tearing in peeces the beast doth please thee: thou shouldest rather be moued with pittie to see a silly innocent Hare murdered of a dogge: the weake of the stronger, the fearefull of the fierce, the innocent of the cruell and vnmercifull. Therefore all this exercise of hunting, as a thing vnworthy to be vsed of freemen, the Vtopians haue reiected to their bouchers, to the which craft (as we said before) they appoint their bondmen. For they count hunting the lowest, the vilest, and most abiect part of bouchery, and the other parts of it, more profitable, and more honest, as bringing much more commoditie, in that they kill beasts only for necessitie.

Whereas the hunter seeketh nothing but pleasure of the silly and wofull beasts slaughter and murder. The which pleasure in beholding death, they thinke doth rise in the very beastes, either of a cruell affection of minde, or else to be changed in continuance of time into cruelty, by long vse of so cruell a pleasure. These therefore and all such like, which be innumerable, though the common sort of people doth take them for pleasures, yet they, seeing there is no naturall pleasantnesse in them, doe plainly determine them to haue no affinitie with true and right pleasure. For as touching that they doe commonly moue the sense with delectation (which seemeth to be a worke of pleasure) this doth nothing diminish their opinion. For not the nature of the thing, but their peruerse and leaud custome is the cause hereof. Which causeth them to accept bitter or sower things for sweet things. Euen as women with child in their viciat and corrupt taste, thinke pitch & tallow sweeter than honey. Howbeit no mans iudgement depraued and corrupt, either by sicknesse, or by custome, can change the nature of pleasure, more then it can doe the nature of other things. They make diuers kinds of pleasures. For some they attribute to the soule, & some of true pleasures.

The kindnesse

to the bodie. To the soule they giue intelligence, & thac delication, that commeth of the contemplation of truth.

Heereunto is ioyned the pleasant remembrance of the good life past. The pleasure of the body they diuide into two parts. The first is, when delectation is sensible felt and perceined, which many times chaunceth by the renewing and refreshing of those parts, which our naturall heate drieth vp. This commeth by meate and drinke. And sometimes whiles those things bee expulsed, and voyded, whereof is in the bodie ouer great aboundance. This pleasure is felt, when wee doe our naturall easement, or when wee bee doing the act of generation, or when the itching of any part is eased with rubbing or scratching. Sometimes pleasure riseth exhibiting to any member nothing that it desireth, nor taking from it any paine that it feeleth, which neuerthelesse tickleth and moueth our senses with a certaine secret efficacie, but with a manifest motion turneth them to it. As is that which commeth of musicke. The second part of bodily pleasure they say, is that which consisteth and resteth in the quiet and vpright state of the body. And that truely is euery mans owne proper health, entermingled and disturbed with no grieife. For this, if they be not leted nor assaulted with no grieife, is delectable of it selfe, though it be moued with no externall or outward pleasure. For though it be not so plaine & manifest to the sence, as the greedy lust of eating and drinking, yet neuertheles, many take it for the chiefest pleasure. All the Vtopians grant it to be a right soueraigne pleasure, & as you would say the foundation and ground of al pleasures, as which euen alone is able to make the state and condition of life delectable & pleasant. And it being once taken away, there is no place left for any pleasure. For to be without grieife not hauing health, that they call vn sensible, and not pleasure.

The Vtopians haue long agoe reiected and condemned the opinion of them, which saide that stedfast and quiet health, (for this question also hath beene diligently of the body.

The pleasures

*Pleasure
deriued from musicke — a tickling.*

Bodily health

debated among them) ought not therefore to be counted a pleasure, because they say it cannot be presently and sensibly perceived and felt by some outward motion. But of the contrary part, now they agree almost all in this, that health is a most soueraigne pleasure. For seeing that in sicknesse (say they) is griefe, which is a mortall enemy to pleasure, euen as sicknesse is to health, why should not then pleasure be in the quietnesse of health? For they say it maketh nothing to this matter, whether you say that sicknesse is a griefe, or that in sicknesse is griefe, for all commeth to one purpose.

For whether health be a pleasure it selfe, or a necessary cause of pleasure, as fire is of heat, truly both waies it followeth, that they cannot be without pleasure, that be in perfect health. Furthermore, whiles we eate (say they) then health, which began to be appaired, fighteth by the helpe of foode against hunger. In the which fight, whiles health by little and little getteth the vpper hand, that same proceeding, and (as we would say) that onwardnesse to the wonted strength, ministreth that pleasure, whereby we be so refreshed. Health therefore, which in the conflict is ioyfull, shall it not be merry, when it hath gotten the victorie? But as soone as it hath recovered the pristinate strength, which thing onely in all the fight it coveted, shall it incontinent be astonied? Nor shall it not know nor imbrace the owne wealth and goodnesse? For where it is said, health cannot be felt, this they thinke is nothing true. For what man walking, say they, feeleth not himselfe in health, but he that is not? Is there any man so possessed with stonish insensibilitie, or with lethargie, that is to say, the sleeping sicknesse, that he will not grant health to be acceptable to him, and delectable? But what other things is delectation, then that which by another name is called pleasure? They imbrace chiefly the pleasures of the minde. For them they count the chiefe and most principall of all. The chiefe part of them they thinke doth come of the exercise of vertue, and conscience Delectations.

The pleasures
of the minde.

ence of good life. Of these pleasures that the body minstreth, they giue the preheminence to health. For the delight of eating and drinking, and whatsoeuer hath any like pleasantnesse, they determine to be pleasures much to be desired, but no otherwaies then for healths sake. For such things of their owne proper nature be not so pleasant, but in that they resist sicknesse priuily stealing on: Therefore, like as it is a wisemans part, rather to auoid sicknesse, then to wish for medicines, and rather to driue away and put to flight carefull griefes, then to call for comfort: so it is much better not to neede this kinde of pleasure, then thereby to be eased of the contrarie grieve. The which kinde of pleasure, if any man take for his felicitie, that man must needs grant, that then he shall be in most feli-citie, if he liue that life, which is led in continuall hunger, thirst, itching, eating, drinking, scratching, and rubbing.
 The which life, how not only foule and vn honest, but also how miserable and wretched it is, who perceiueth not?
 These doubtlesse be the basest pleasures of all, as vn pure and vnperfect. For they neuer come but accompanied with their contrary griefes. As with the pleasure of eating, is ioyned hunger, and that after no very equall sort.
 For of these two, the grieve is both the more vehement, and also of longer continuance. For it beginneth before the pleasure, and endeth not vntill the pleasure die with it. Wherefore such pleasures they thinke not greatly to be set by, but in that they be necessary. Howbeit they haue delight also in these, and thankfully knowledge the tender loue of mother Nature, which with most pleasant delestation allureth her children to that, to the necessary vse whereof, they must from time to time continually be forced and driuen. For how wretched and miserable should our life be, if these daily griefes of hunger and thirst could not be driuen away, but with bitter potions, and sowre medicines, as the other diseases be, wherewith we be fildomer troubled? But bewtie, strength, nimblenesse, these as peculiar and pleasant gifts of nature, they make much off.

The gifts of Nature.

But those pleasures that be received by the eares, the eyes, and the nose, which nature willett to be proper and peculiar to man (for no other liuing creature doth behold the fairenesse and the beautie of the world, or is moued with any respect of saouours, but onely for the diuersitie of meats, neither perceiueth the concordant and discordant distances of sounds and tunes) these pleasures. I say, they accept and allow as certaine pleasant reioycings of life. But in all things this cautell they vse, that a lesse pleasure hinder not a bigger, and that the pleasure be no cause of displeasure, which they thinke to follow of necessitie, if the pleasure be vn honest. But yet to despise the comeliness of beautie, to waste the bodily strength, to turne nimblenesse into slothishnesse: to consume and make feeble the body with fasting: to doe iniury to health, and to reiect the pleasant motions of nature, vnlesse a man neglect these commodities, whiles he doth with a feruent zeale procure the wealth of others, or the common profit, for the which pleasure forborne, he is in hope of a greater pleasure at Gods hand: else for a vaine shadow of vertue, for the wealth and profit of no man, to punish himselfe, or to the intent he may be able couragiously to suffer aduersity, which perchance shall neuer come to him: this to doe, they thinke it a point of extreame madnesse, and a token of a man cruelly minded towards himselfe, and vnkinde towards nature, as one so disdainig to be in her danger, that he renounceth and refuseth all her benefits. This is their sentence and opinion of vertue and pleasure. And they beleue that by mans reason none can be found truer then this, vnlesse any godlier be inspired into man from heauen. Wherein whether they beleue well or no, neither the time doth suffer vs to discusse, neither it is now necessarie. For we haue taken vpon vs to shew and declare their lotts and ordinances, and not to defend them. But this thing I beleue verily, howsoever these decrees be, that there is in no place of the world, neither a more excellent people, neither a more flourishing

Marke this well.

thing Common-wealth. They be light and quicke of body, full of actiuitie and nimblenesse, and of more strength then a man would iudge them by their stature, which for all that is not too low. And though their soyle bee not very fruitfull, nor their ayre very wholesome, yet against the ayre they so defend them with temperate diet, and so order and husband their ground with diligent trauaile, that in no Countrey is greater increase and plentie of Corne and Cattle, nor mens bodies of longer life, and subiect or apt to fewer diseases. There therefore a man may see well, and diligently exploited and furnished, not only those things which husbandmen doe commonly in other Countries, as by craft and cunning to remedy the barrennesse of the ground, but also a whole wood by the hands of the people plucked vp by the rootes in one place, and set againe in another place. Wherein was had regard and consideration, not of plentie, but of commodious carriage, that wood and timber might be nigher to the sea, or the riuers, or the cities. For it is lesse labour and businesse to carry graine far by land then wood. The people be gentle, merry, quicke and fine witted, delighting in quietnesse, and when neede requireth, able to abide and suffer much bodily labour. Else they be not greatly desirous and fond of it: but in the exercise and study of the minde they be neuer weary. When they had heard me speake of the Greeke literature or learning (for in Latine there was nothing that I thought they would greatly allow, besides Histories and Poets) they made wonderfull earnest and importunate sute vnto me that I would teach and instruct them in that tongue and learning. I began therefore to reade vnto them, at the first truly, more because I would not seem to refuse the labour, then that I hoped that they would any thing profit therein. But when I had gone forward a little, I perceiued incontinent by their diligence, that my labour should not be bestowed in vaine.
 For they began so easily to fashion their letters, so plainly to pronounce the words, so quickly to learne by heart, and

The wealth and description of the Vtopians.

A wonderfull apinesse to learning in the Vtopians.

But now most block-headed assies be set to learning, and most pregnant wits corrupt with pleasures.

and so surely to rehearse the same, that I marvelled at it, saying that the most part of them were fine, and chosen wits, and of ripe age, picked out of the companie of the learned men, which not onely of their owne free and voluntary will, but also by the commandement of the Councell, vnderooke to learne this language. Therefore in lesse then three yeares space, there was nothing in the Greeke tongue that they lacked. They were able to read good Authors without any stay, if the booke were not false. This kind of learning, as I suppose, they tooke so much the sooner, because, it is somewhat alliant to them: For I thinke that this Nation tooke their beginning of the Greekes, because their speech, which in all other points is not much vnlike the Persian tongue, keeping diuers signes and tokens of the Greeke language in the names of their Cities, and of their Magistrates. They haue of me (for when I was determined to enter into my fourth voyage, I cast into the ship in the stead of merchandise a prettie fardle of bookes, because I intended to come againe rather neuer, then shortly) they haue, I say of me, the most part of Platoes workes, more of Aristotles, also Theophrastus of plants, but in diuers places (which I am sorry for) vnperct. For whiles we were a ship-boord, a Marmoset chanced vpon the booke, as it was negligently laid by, which wantonly playing therewith, plucked out certaine leaues and tore them in pieces. Of them that haue written the Grammer, they haue only Lascares. For Theodorus I caried not with me, nor neuer a dictionary, but Hesichius, and Dioscorides. They set great store by Plutarches bookes. And they be delighted with Lucians merry conceits and iests. Of the Poets they haue Aristophanes, Homer, Euripides, and Sophocles in Aldus small print. Of the Historians they haue Thucydides, Herodotus, and Herodian. Also my companion Tricinus Apinatus carried with him Physicke bookes, certaine small workes of Hipocrates, and Galens Microtechnie. The which booke they haue in great estimation: For though there there bee almost no nation vnder heauen that hath lesse neede of Phisicke then they, yet this notwithstanding, Phisicke is no where in greater honour. Because they count the knowledge of it among the godliest, and most profitable parts of Philosophie. For whiles they by the helpe of this philosophie search out the secret misteries of nature, they thinke themselves to receiue thereby not onely wonderfull great pleasure, but also to obtaine great thanks and fauour of the authour and maker thereof. Whom they thinke according to the fashion of other artificers, to haue set forth the marueilous and gorgious frame of the world for man, with great affection, intentiuely to behold. Whom onely he hath made of wit, and capacitie to consider and vnderstand the excellencie of so great a worke. And therefore he beareth (say they) more good will and loue to the curious and diligent beholder, and viewer of his worke and marueilour at the same, then hee doth to him, which like a very bruit beast without wit and reason, or as one without sense or moouing, hath no regard to so great and so wonderfull a spectacle. The wits therefore of the Vtiopians inured & exercised in learning, be marueilous quick in the inuention of feats, helping any thing to the aduantge and wealth of life. Howbeit two feats they may thanke vs for. That is, the science of imprinting, and the craft of making paper. And yet not onely vs, but chiefly and principally themselves. For when we shewed to them Aldus his print in bookes of paper, and told them of the stufte whereof paper is made, and of the feat of grauing letters, speaking somewhat more, then we could plainly declare (for there was none of vs, that knew perfectly either the one or the other) they forthwith very wittily coniectured the thing. And where as before, they wrote onely in skins, in barks of trees, and in reedes, now they haue attempted to make paper, and to imprint letters. And though at the first it proued not all of the best, yet by often assaying the same, they shortly got the feat of both. And haue so brought the matter about, that

Phisicke highly regarded.

The contemplation of nature.

that if they had copies of Greeke authors, they could lacke no books. But now they haue no more, then I rehearsed before, sauing that by printing of bookes, they haue multiplied and increased the same into many thousands of copies. Whosoeuer commeth thither to see the land, being excellent in any gift of wit, or through much and long iourneying, well experienced and seene in the knowledge of many countries (for the which cause we were very welcome to them) him they receiue and entertaine wondrous gently, and louingly. For they haue delight to heare what is done in euery land, howbeit very few merchant men come thither. For what should they bring thither, vnlesse it were yron, or else gold and siluer, which they had rather carry home again? Also such things as are to be carried out their land, they thinke it more wisdome to carie that geere forth themselves, then that other should come thither to fetch it, to the intent they may the better know the our lands on euery side of them, and keepe in vre the feate and knowledge of sailing.

Of bondmen, sicke persons, wedlocke, and diuers other matters.

A mesuailous equitie of this nation.

They neither make bondmen of prisoners taken in battaile, vnlesse it bee in battaile that they fought themselves, nor of bondmens children, nor to be short, of any such as they can get out of forreigne countries, though he were yet there a bondman. But either such, as among themselves for heynous offences be punished bondage, or else such, as in the Cities of other lands for great trespasses be condemned to death. And of this sort of bondmen they haue most store.

For many of them they bring home sometimes, paying very little for them, yea most commonly getting them for gramercie. These sortes of bondmen they keepe not onely in continuall worke, and labour, but also in bands.

But

But their owne men they handle hardest, whom they iudge more despeate, and to haue deserued greater punishment, because they being so godly brought vp to vertue in so excellent a common wealth, could not for all that be refrained from misdoing. An other kind of bondmen they haue, when a vile drudge being a poore laborer in another Countrey, doth choose of his owne free will to be a bondman among them. These they intreat and order honestly, and entertaine almost as gently, as their owne free citizens, sauing that they put them to a little more labour, as thereto accustomed. If any such, bee disposed to depart thence (which seldome is seene) they neither hold him against his wil, neither send him away with empty hands. The sicke (as I said) they see to with great affection, and let nothing at all passe, concerning either Phisicke or good diet, whereby they may be restored againe to their health. Such as be sicke of incureable diseases, they comfort with sitting by them, and to be short, with all manner of helpes that may be. But if the disease bee not onely vncureable, but also full of continuall paine and anguish, then the priests and the magistrates exhort the man, seeing hee is not able to doe any dutie of life, and by ouerliuing, his owne death is noysome and irksome to other, and grievous to himselfe: that he will determine with himselfe no longer to cherish that pestilent and painefull disease. And seeing his life is to him but a torment, that he wil not be vnwilling to die, but rather take a good hope to him, & death. either dispatch himself out of that painefull life, as out of a prison, or a racke of torment, or else suffer himselfe willingly to be ridde out of it by other. And in so doing, they tell him he shal do wisely, seeing by his death he shal loose no commodity, but end his paine. And because in that act he shal follow the counsell of the priests, that is to say, of the interpreters of gods wil and pleasure, they shew him that he shall doe like a godly and a vertuous man. They that beethus perswaded, finish their liues willingly, either with hunger, or else dye in their sleepe without any feeling

Of them that be sicke.

suicide recommended, as a relief from paine.

feeling of death. But they cause none such to die against his will, nor they vse no lesse diligence and attendance about him, beleewing this to be an honorable death. Else he that killeth himselfe before that the priests and the Counsell haue allowed the cause of his death, him as vnworthy either to be buried, or with fire to be consumed, they cast vnburied into some stinking marriish. The woman is not married before she be eigteene yeares old.

Of wedlocke.

The man is foure yeares elder before he marrie. If eyther the man or the woman be proued to haue actually offended before their marriage, with an other, the partie that so hath trespassed, is sharply punished. And both the offenders, be forbidden euer after in all their life to marrie : vnlesse the fault be fotgiuen by the Princes pardon. Both the good man and good wife of the house, where that offence was committed, as being slacke and negligent in looking to their charge, be in danger of great reproach, and infamie. That offence is so sharply punished, because they perceiue, that vnlesse they be diligently kept from the libertie of this vice, few will ioyne together in the loue of marriage, wherein all the life must be led with one, and also all the griefes and displeasures coming therewith patiently be taken and born. Furthermore in choosing wiues and husbands, they obserue earnestly and straightly a custome, which seemed to vs very fond and foolish. For a sad and honest patron sheweth the woman be she maid or widdow, naked to the wooer. And likewise a sage and discreet man, exhibiteth the wooer naked to the woman. At this custome we laughed, and disallowed it as foolish. But they on the other part doe greatly wonder at the folly of all other nations, which in buying a colt, whereas a little money is in hazard, bee so charie and circumspect, that though he be almost all bare, yet they will not buy him, vnlesse the saddle and all the harnesse be taken off, least vnder those couerings be hid some gall or sore. And yet in choosing a wife, which shall be

Though not very honestly, yet not vnwisely.

men marry at 22;
women at 18.

The persons of men and women exposed to each other previously to marriage.

be either pleasure or displeasure to them all their life after, they be so rechelesse, that all the residue of the womans body being couered with cloathes, they esteem her scarcely by one hand breadth (for they can see no more but her face) and so to ioyne her to them not without great ieopardie of euill agreeing together, if any thing in her body afterward should chance to offend, and mislike them.

For all men be not so wise, as to haue respect to the vertuous condition of the partie. And the endowments of the body, cause the vertues of the mind more to be esteemed and regarded: yea euen the mariages of wise men. Verily so foule deformitie may be hid vnder those couerings, that it may quite alienate and take away the mans minde from his wife, when it shall not bee lawfull for their bodies to be separate againe. If such deformitie happen by any chance after the marriage is consummate and finished, well, therein no remedy but patience. Euery man must take his fortune well in worth. But it were well done that a law were made whereby all such deceits might be eschewed, and auoided before hand.

And this were they constrained more earnestly to look vpon, because they onely of the nations in that part of the world be content euery man with one wife a piece. And matrimonie is there neuer broken, but by death: except adulterie breake the bond, or else the intollerable wayward manners of either partie. For if either of them finde themselves for any such cause greued, they may by the licence of the Counsell, change and take another. But the other partie liueth euer after in infamie, and out of wedlocke. Howbeit the husband to put away his wife for no other fault, but for that some mishap is fallen to her body, this by no meanes they will suffer: for they iudge it a great point of crueltie, that any body in their most neede of helpe and comfort, should be cast off and forsaken, and that old age, which both bringeth sicknesse with it, and is a sicknesse it selfe, should vnkindly, and vnfaithfully be delt withall. But now and then it chan-

Diuorcement.

ceth, whereas the man and woman cannot well agree betweene themselues, both of them finding other, with whom they hope to liue more quietly and merrily, that they by the full consent of them both, be diuorced asunder and married againe to other. But that not without the authoritie of the Councell. Which agreeth to no diuorces, before they and their wiues haue diligently tryed and examined the matter. Yea and then also they be loath to consent to it, because they know this to be the next way to breake loue betweene man and wife, to be in easie hope of a new marriage. Breakers of wedlocke be punished with most greuous bondage. And if both the offenders were married, then the parties which in that behalfe haue suffered wrong, being diuorced from the adulterers, be married together, if they will, or else to whom they lust. But if either of them both do stil continue in loue toward so vnkind a bed-fellow, the vse of wedlocke is not to them forbidden, if the partie faultlesse be disposed to follow in toying and drudgery, the person, which for that offence is condemned to bondage. And very oft it chanceth, that the repentance of the one, and the earnest diligence of the other, doth so moue the Prince with pittie & compassion, that he restoreth the bond person from seruitude, to libertie and freedome again. But if the same party be taken estfoones in that fault, there is no other way but death. To other trespasses no prescript punishment is appointed by any law. But according to the hainousnesse of

The decerning of punishment put to the discretion of the Magistrates.

the offence, or contrary, so the punishment is moderated by the discretion of the Councell. The husbands chastice their wiues, & the parents their children, vnlesse they haue done any so horrible an offence, that the open punishment therof maketh much for the aduancemet of honest maners.

But most commonly the most hainous faults be punished with the incommoditie of bondage. For that they suppose to be to the offenders no lesse grieue, and to the Common-wealth more profit, then if they should hastily put them to death, and so make them quite out of the way.

For

For there commeth more profit of their labour, then of their death, and by their example they feare other the longer from like offences. But if they beeing thus vsed, doe rebell and kicke againe, then forsooth they bee slaine as desprat and wild beasts, whom neither prison nor chaine could restraine and keepe vnder. But they, which take their bondage patiently, be not left all hopelesse. For after they haue beene broken and tamed with long miseries; if then they shew such repentance, as thereby it may be perceiued that they be soryer for their offence then for their punishment: sometimes by the Princes prerogatiue, and sometimes by the voice and consent of the people, their bondage either is mittigated, or else cleane released and forgiuen. He that mooueth to adultery is in no lesse danger and ieopardie, then if he had committed adulterie in deed. For in all offences they count the intent and pretended purpose as euill, as the act or deed it selfe, thinking that no let ought to excuse him, that did his best to haue no let. They haue singuler delight and pleasure in fooles. And as it is a great reproach to do to any of them hurt or iniurie, so they prohibit not to take pleasure of foolishnesse. For that, they thinke, doth much good to the fooles. And if any man be so sad & sterne; that he cannot laugh neither at their words, nor at their deeds, none of them be committed to his tuition: for feare least he would not intreat them gently and fauourably enough: to whom they should bring no delectation (for other goodnesse in them is none) much lesse any profit should they yeeld him. To mocke a man for his deformitie, or for that he lacketh one part or limme of his body, is counted great dishonesty and reproach, not to him that is mocked, but to him that mocketh. Which vnwisely doth imbraid any man of that as a vice, that was not in his power to eschew. Also as they count and reckon very little wit to be in him, that regardeth not naturall beautie and comelineesse; so to helpe the same with paintings, is taken for a vain & a wanton pride, not without great infamy. For they know euen by very experience,

Motion to adultery punished.

Pleasure of fooles.

Counterfeite beautie.

Sin punished, and vertue rewarded.

The inordinate desire of honors condemned.

Magistrats honoured.

Few Lawes.

The multitude of Lawyers superfluous.

perience, that no comelinesse of beautie doth so highly commend and aduance the wiues in the conceits of their husbands, as honest conditions and lowlinesse: For as loue is oftentimes wonne with beautie, so it is not kept, preserued and continued, but by vertue and obedience. They do not onely feare their people from doing euill, by punishments, but also allure them to vertue with rewards of honour. Therefore they set vp in the Market place the Images of notable men, and of such as haue been bountifull benefactors to the Common-wealth, for the perpetuall memorie of their good acts: and also that the glorie and renowne of the auncestors may stirre and prouoke their posteritie to vertue. He that inordinatly and ambitiously desireth promotions, is left all hopelesse for euer attaining any promotion as long as he liueth. They liue together louingly: For no Magistrate is either haughtie or fearefull. Fathers they be called, and like fathers they vse themselves. The citizens (as it is their dutie) willingly exhibit vnto them due honour without any compulsion. Nor the Prince himselfe is not koowne from the other by princely apparell, or a robe of state, nor by a crowne or diademe royall, or cap of maintenance, but by a little sheafe of corne caried before him. And so a taper of wax is borne before the Bishop, whereby only he is knowne. They haue but few laws. For to people so instruct & instructed, very few do suffice. Yea, this thing they chiefly reprove among other actiōs, that innumerable books of laws and expositions vpon the same be not sufficient. But they hink it against al right & iustice, that men should be bound to those laws, which either be in number mo then be able to be read, or else blinder and darker, then that any man can well vnderstand them. Furthermore they vtterly exclude and banish all Attornies, Proctors, and Sergeants at the Law, which craftily handle matters, and subtilly dispute of the lawes. For they thinke it most meet, that euery man should pleade his owne matter, and tell the same tale to the Iudge, that he would tell to his man of law. So shall shall there be lesse circumstance of words, and the truth shall sooner come to light, whiles the Iudge with a discreet iudgement doth way the words of him, whom no Lawyer hath instruct with deceit, and whiles he beareth out simple wits against the false and malicious circumuentions of craftie children. This is hard to be obserued in other Countries, in so infinit a number of blind and intricate lawes. But in Vtopia euery man is a cunning Lawyer. For as (I said) they haue very few lawes: and the plainer and grosser that any interpretation is: that they allow as most iust. For all lawes (say they) be made and published only to the intent, that by them euery man shall be put in remembrance of his dutie. But the craftie and subtile interpretation of them (forasmuch as few can attaine thereto) can put very few in that remembrance, whereas the simple, the plaine, and grosse meaning of the lawes is open to euery man. Else as touching the vulgar sort of the people, which be both most in number, and haue most neede to know their duties, were it not as good for them, that no law were made at all, as when it is made to bring so blind an interpretation vpon it, that without great wit and long arguing no man can discusse it? To the finding out whereof, neither the grosse iudgement of the people can attaine, neither the whole life of them that be occupied in working for their liuings, can suffice thereto. These vertues of the Vtopians haue caused their next neighbours and borderers, which liue free and vnder no subiection (for the Vtopians long agoe, haue deliuered many of them from tyrannie) to take Magistrates of them, some for a yeare, and some for fise yeares space. Which when the time of their office is expired, they bring home againe with honour and praise, and take new againe with them into their Countrey.

The intent of
lawes.

These nations haue vndoubtedly very well and holisomly provided for their Common-wealthes. For seeing that both the making and the marring of the weale publique, doth depend and hang vpon the manners of the rulers and Magistrats, what officers could they more wisely haue chosen, then those which cannot be led from honellie by bribes (for to them that shortly after shal depart thence into their owne countrie, money should be vnprofitable) not yet be moued either with fauour, or malice towards any man, as being strangers, & vnacquainted with the people? The which two vices of affection and auarice, where they take place in iudgements, incontinent they breake iustice, the strongest and surest bond of a common wealth. These peoples which fetch their officers & rulers from them, the Vropians call their fellowes. And other to whom they haue bin beneficiall, they call their friends. As touching leagues, which in other places betweene countrie & countrie, be so often concluded, broken and renewed, they neuer make none with any nation. For to what purpose serue leagues, say they? As though nature had not set sufficient loue betweene man & man. And who so regardeth not nature, thinke you that he will passe for words? They be brought into this opinion chiefly, because that in those parts of the world, leagues betweene Princes bee wont to be kept and obserued very slenderly. For heere in Frigopa, and especially in these parts where the faith and religion of Christ reigneth, the maiestie of leagues is euery where esteemed holy and inuiolable: partly through the iustice and goodnesse of Princes, and partly at the reuerence and motion of the head Bishops. Which like as they make no promise themselves, but they doe verie religiously performe the same, so they exhort all Princes in any wise to abide by their promises, and them that refuse or denie so to doe, by their pontificall power and authoritie, they compell thereto. And surely they thinke well that it might seme a very reproachfull thing, if in the leagues of them which by a peculiar name be called faithfull, faith should haue no place. But in that new found part of the world, which is scarcely so far from vs beyond the line equinoctiall, as our life and maners be dissident from theirs, no trust nor confidence is in leagues. But the moe

and

and holier cerimony the league is knit vp with, the sooner it is broken by some cauillation found in the words, which manytimes of purpose be so craftily put in and placed, that the bands can neuer be so sure nor so strong, but they will finde some hole open to creepe out at, and to breake both league and truth. The which craftie dealing, yea the which fraud and deceit, if they should know it to be practised among priuate men in their bargaines and contracts, they would incontinent cry out at it with an open mouth, and a fowre countenance, as an offence most detestable, and worthy to be punished with a shamefull death: yea euen verie they that aduance themselves authors of like counsaile, is giuen to Princes. Wherefore it may well bee thought, either that all iustice is but a base and a low vertue, and which auaieth it selfe farre vnder the high dignitie of Kings: Or at the least-wise, that there be two iustices, the one meet for the inferiour sort of the people, going a foote and creeping low by the ground, and bound downe on euery side with many bands, because it shall not run at rouers. The other a princely vertue, which like as it is of much higer Maiestie, then the other poore iustice, so also it is of much more libertie, as to the which nothing is vnlawfull that it lusteth after. These manners of Princes (as I said) which bee there so euill keepers of leagues, cause the Vtopians, as I suppose, to make no leagues at all, which perchance would change their minde if they liued heere. Howbeit they thinke that though leagues bee neuer so faithfully obserued and kept, yet the custome of making leagues was verie euill begunne. For this causeth men) as though nations which be seperate a sinder, by the space of a litle hil, or riuer, were coupled together by no societie or bond of nature) to thinke themselves borne aduersaries and enemies one to another, and that it were lawfull for the one to seeke the death and destruction of the other, if leagues were not: yea, and that after the leagues bee accorded, friendship doth not grow and increase: But the licence of robbing and stealing doth still remaine, remain, as farre forth as for lacke of fore-sight and aduifement in writing the words of the league, any sentence or clause to the contrarie is not, therein sufficiently comprehended. But they be of a contrary opinion. That is, that no man ought to be counted an enemy, which hath done no iniurie. And that the fellowship of nature is a strong league, and that men be better and more surely knit together by loue and beneuolence, then by couenants of leagues: by heartie affection of minde, then by words.

Of War-fare.

Warre or Battell as a thing very beastly, and yet to no kinde of beasts in so much vse as to man, they doe detest and abhorre. And contrary to the custome almost of all other nations, they count nothing so much against glory, as glory gotten in warre. And therefore though they doe daily practice and exercise themselues in the discipline of warre, and not onely the men, but also the women vpon certaine appointed daies, lest they should be to seeke in the feate of armes, if need should require, yet they neuer goe to battaile, but either in the defence of their owne Country, or to driue out of their friends land the enemies that haue inuaded it, or by their power to deliuer from the yoake and bondage of tyrannie some people, that be therewith oppressed. Which thing they do of mere pittie and compassion. Howbeit they send helpe to their friends, not euer in their defence, but sometimes also to requite and reuenge iniuries before to them done. But this they doe not vnlesse their counsell and aduise in the matter be asked, whiles it is yet new and fresh. For if they finde the cause probable, and if the contrary part will not restore againe such things as be of them iustly demanded, then they be the chiefe authors and makers of the warre. Which they doe not only as oft as by inrodes and inuasions inuations of souldiers preyes and booties be driuen, but then also much more mortally, when their friends marchants in any land, either vnder the pretence of vniust lawes, or else by the wresting and wrong vnderstanding of good lawes, doe sustaine an vniust accusation vnder the colour of iustice. Neither the battaile which the Vtopians fought for the Nephelogetes against the Alaopolitanes a little before our time, was made for any other cause, but that the Nephelogete marchant men, as the Vtopians thought, suffered wrong of the Alaopolitanes, vnder the pretence of right. But whether it were right or wrong, it was with so cruell and mortall warre reuenged, the Countries round about ioyning their helpe and power to the puissance and malice of both parties, that most flourishing and wealthy peoples, being some of them shrewdly shaken, and some of them sharply beaten, the mischiefes were not finished nor ended, vntill the Alaopolitanes, at the last were yeelded vp as bondmen into the iurisdiction of the Nephelogetes. For the Vtopians fought not this warre for themselues. And yet the Nephelogetes before the warre, when the Alaopolitanes flourished in wealth, were nothing to be compared with them. So eagerly the Vtopians prosecute the iniuries done to their friends: yea, in money matters, and not their owne likewise. For if they by couine or guile be wiped beside their goods, so that no violence be done to their bodies, they wreake their anger by abstaining from occupying with that nation, vntill they haue made satisfaction. Not for because they set lesse store by their owne Citizens, then by their friends: but that they take the losse of their friends money more heauily then the losse of their owne. Because that their friends merchant men, for as much as that the losse is their owne priuate goods, sustaine great damage by the losse. But their owne Citizens lose nothing but of the common goods, and of that which was at home plentifull and almost superfluous, else had it not bin sent toorth. Therefore no man feeleth the losse.

Victory deere bought.

And for this cause they thinke it too cruell an act, to reuenge the losse with the death of man, the incommodie of the which losse no man feeleth neither in his life, nor yet in his liuing. But if it chance that any of their men be in any other Countrie be maimed or killed, whether it be done by a common or a priuate Councel, knowing and trying out the truth of the matter by their Ambassadors, vnlesse the offenders be rendered vnto them in recompence of the iniurie, they will not be appeased: but incontinent they proclaime warre against them. The offenders yeelded, they punish either with death, or with bondage. They be not only sory, but also ashamed to achieve the victorie with bloudshed, counting it great folly to buy precious wares too deare. They reioyce and auant themselves, if they vanquish and oppresse their enemy by craft and deceit. And for that act they make a generall triumph, and as if the matter were manfully handled, they set vp a pillar of stone in the place, where they so vanquished their enemies, in token of their victorie. For then they glory, then they boast & crack, that they haue plaied the men indeed, when they haue so ouercome, as no other liuing creature, but only man could: that is to say, by the might and puissance of wit. For with bodily strength (say they) beares, lions, boores, wolves dogs, and other wilde beasts doe fight. And as the most part of them doe passe vs in strength and fierce courage, so in wit and reason we be much stronger then they all. Their chiefe and principall purpose in war, is to obtaine that thing, which if they had before obtained, they would not haue moued battaile. But if that be not possible, they take such cruell vengeance of them which be in the fault, that euer after they be affraid to doe the like.

This is their chiefe and principall intent, which they immediately and first of all prosecute, and set forward. But yet so, that they be more circumspect in auoyding and eschewing ieopardies, then they be desirous of praise and renowne. Therefore immediately after that warre is once solemnly solemnly denounced, they procure many proclamations signed with their owne common seale, to be set vp priuily at one time in their enemies land, in places most frequented. In these proclamations they promise great rewards to him that will kill their enemies Prince, and somewhat lesse gifts, but them very great also, for euery head of them, whose names be in the said proclamations conteined. They be those whom they count their chiefe aduersaries, next vnto the Prince whom there is prescribed vnto him that killeth any of the proclaimed persons, that is doubled to him that bringeth any of the same to them alieue : yea, and to the proclaimed persons themselves, if they will change their mindes, and come into them, taking their parts, they proffer the same great rewards with pardon and suertie of their liues. Therefore it quickly commeth to passe, that their enemies haue all other men in suspicion, and be vnthankfull, and mistrusting among themselves one to another, liuing in great feare, and in no lesse ieopardie. For it is well knowne, that diuers times the most part of them (and specially the Prince himselfe) hath been betraied of them, in whom they put their most hope and trust. So there is no manner of act nor deed that gifts and rewards doe not inforce men vnto. And in rewards they keepe no measure. But remembring and considering into how great hazard and ieopardie they call them, endeavour themselves to recompence the greatnesse of the danger with like great benefits. And therefore they promise not onely wonderfull great abundance of gold, but also lands of great reuenues lying in most safe places among their friends. And their promises they performe faithfully without any fraud or couine.

This custome of buying and selling aduersaries, among other people is disallowed, as a cruell act of a base and a cowa dish mind. But they in this behalfe thinke themselves much praise worthy, as who likewise, men by this meanes dispatch great warres without battaile or skirmish. Yea, they count it also a deeде of pittie and mercie, mercie, because that by the death of a few offenders, the liues of a great number of innocents, as well of their owne men, as also of their enemies, be ransomed and saued, which in fighting should haue bene slaine. For they doe no lesse pittie the base and common sort of their enemies people, then they doe their owne: knowing that they be driuen and forced to war against their willes, by the furious madnesse of their Princes and heads. If by none of these meanes the matter goe forward, as they would haue it, then they procure occasions of debate, and dissention to be spread among their enemies. As by bringing the Princes brother, or some of the noble men in hope to obtaine the Kingdome. If this way preuaile not, then they raise vp the people that be next neighbours and borderers to their enemies, and them they set in their necks vnder the colour of some old title of right, such as Kings doe neuer lacke. To them they promise their helpe and ayde in their warre. And as for money they giue them abundance. But of their owne Citizens they send to them few or none: whom they make so much off, and loue so intirely, that they would not be willing to change any of them for their aduersaries Prince. But their gold and silver, because they keepe it all for this onelie purpose, they lay it out frankly and freele: as who should liue euen as wealtheilie, if they had bestowed it euery pennie. Yea and besides their riches, which they keepe at home, they haue also an infinite treasure abroad, by reason that (as I said before) many nations be in their debt. Therefore they hire souldiors out of all countries and send them to battaile, but chieflie of the Zapotlers. This people, is fife hundred miles from Trepia eastward. They be hideous, sauage, and fierce, dwelling in wild woods, and high mountaines, where they were bread and brought vp. They be of an hard nature, able to abide and sustain heate, cold, and labour, abhorring from all delicate dainties, occupying no husbandry nor tillage of the ground, homely and rude both in building of their houses and in their apparel, parell, giuen vnto no goodnesse, but onely to the breeding and bringing vp of cattle. The most part of their liuing is by hunting and stealing. They bee borne onely to warre, which they diligently and earnestly seeke for. And when they haue gotten it, they bee wondrous glad thereof. They goe forth of their countrey in great companies together, and whosocuer lacketh souldiers, there they proffer their seruice for small wages. This is onely the craft that they haue to get their liuing by. They maintaine their liues, by seeking their death. For them with whom they be in wages, they fight hardly, fiercely, and faithfully. But they binde themselues for no certaine time. But vpon this condition they enter into bonds, that the next day they will take part with the other side for greater wages, and the next day after that, they will bee readie to come backe againe for a little more money. There be few warres thereaway, wherein is not a great number of them in both parties. Therefore it daily chan- ceth, that aigh kinsfolke which were hired together on one part, and there very friendly and familiarly vsed them- selues one with another, shortly after being separate into contrary parts, run one against another enuiously & fiercely: and forgetting both kindred and friendship, thrust their swords one in another. And that for none other cause, but that they be hired for contrary Princes for a little money. Which they doe so highly regard and esteeme, that they will easily bee prouoked to chaunge parts for a halfe-pennie more wages by the day. So quickly they haue taken a smacke in couetousnesse. Which for all that, is to them no profit. For that they get by fighting, immediately they spend needeleffe, vnchristily and wretchedly in ryot.

This people fighteth for the Vtopians against all nations, because they giue them greater wages, then any other nation will. For the Vtopians like as they seeke good men to vse well, so they seeke these euill and vicious men to abuse. Whom, when neede requireth, with promises of great rewards, they put forth into great ieopardies. From whence the most part of them neuer cometh againe to aske their rewards. Bat to them that remaine aliuē, they pay that which they promised faithfully, that they may be the more willing to put themselves in like danger another time. Nor the Vtopians passe not how many of them they bring to destruction. For they beleue that they should do a very good deed for al mankind, if if they could rid out of that world all that foule stinking den of that most wicked and cursed people. Next vnto these, they vse the souldiers of them for whom they fight: and then the helpe of their other friends. And last of all, they ioyne to their owne citizens. Among whom they giue to one of tried vertue and powers, the rule, gouernance, and conduction of the whole armie. Vnder him they appoint two other, which whiles he is safe, be both priuate and out of office. But if he be taken or slaine, the one of the other succeedeth him, as it were by inheritance. And if the second miscarry, then the third taketh his roome, least that (as the chance of battaile is vncertaine and doubtfull) the ieopardie or death of the Captaine should bring the whole armie in hazard. They choose souldiours out of euery Citie, those, which put forth themselves willingly. For they thrust no man forth into war against his wil: because they beleue, if any man be fearesull & faint-hearted of nature, he will not only do no manfull and hardy act himselfe, but also be occasion of cowardnesse to his fellowes. But if any battaile be made against their owne Countrie, then they put these cowards (so that they be strong bodied) in ships among other bold hearted men. Or else they dispose them vpon the wals, from whence they may not flie. Thus what for shame that their enemies be at hand, and what for because they be without hope of running away, they forget all feare. And many times extreame necessitie turneth cowardnesse into prowesse and manlinesse. But as none of them is thrust forth of his Country into warre against his
 Q mis

his will, so women that bee willing to accompany their husbands in time of warre, bee not prohibited or letted. Yea they prouoke and exhort them to it with praises. And in set field the wiues doe stand euery one by their owne husbands side. Also euery man is compassed next about with his owne children, kinsfolkes, and alliaunce. That they whom nature chiefly mooueth to mutuall succour, thus standeth together, may helpe one another. It is a great reproach and dishonestie for the husband to come home without his wife, or the wife without her husband, or the sonne without his father. And therefore if the other part sticke so hard by it, that the battell come to their hands, it is fought with great slaughter and blood-shed, euen to the vtter destruction of both parties. For as they make all the meanes and shifts that may bee, to keepe themselves from the necessitie of fighting, or that they may dispatch the battell by their hired souldiers, so when there is no remedie, but that they must needes fight themselves, then they doe as courageously fall to it, as before, whiles they might, they did wisely auoyde and refuse it. Nor they bee not most fierce at the first brunt. But in continuance by little and little their fierce courage encrease, with so stubborne and obstinate mindes, that they will rather die then giue backe an inch. For that suretie of liuing, which euery man hath at home, being ioyned with no carefull anxietie or remembrance how their posteritie shall liue after them (for this pensiuenesse oftentimes breaketh and abateth courageous stomackes) making them stout & hardy, and disclaimefull to be conquered. Moreouer, their knowledge in chivalrie and feates of armes, putteth them in a good hope. Finally, the whole some and vertuous opinions wherein they were brought vp euen frō their childhood, partly through learning, and partly through the good ordinance & lawes of their weale publique, augment and encrease their manfull courage. By reason wherof, they neither set so little store by their liues, that they wil rashly and vnadvisedly

The Captaine is chiefly to be pursued, to the intent the battaile may the sooner be ended.

cast them away : nor they be nor so far in laud and fond loue therewith, that they will shamefully couet to keepe them, when honestly biddeth leaue them. When the battell is hottest, and in all places most fierce and feruent, a band of chosen and picked yong men, which be sworne to liue and die together, take vpon them to destroy their ad-uersaries captaine. Whom they inuade now with priuie wiles, now by open strength. At him they strike both neare and farre off. He is assailed with a long and a continuall assault, fresh men still comming in the wearied mens places. And seldome it chanceth, vnlesse he saue himselfe by flying) that he is not either slaine or else taken prisoner, and yeeled to his enemies aliue. If they win the field, they persecute not their enemies with the violent rage of slaughter. For they had rather take them aliue, then kill them. Neither doe they follow the chase and pursuit of their enemies, but they leaue behinde them one part of their hoast in battaile array, vnder their standards. Infomuch, that if all their whole armie be discomfited and ouer-come, sauing the rereward, and that they therewith archiue the victory, then they had rather let all their enemies scape, then to follow them out of array. For they remember it hath chanced vnto themselues more then once : the whole power and strength of their hoast being vanquished and put to flight, whiles their enemies reioycing in the victory haue persecuted them, flying some one way and some another, a small companie of their men lying in ambush, there readie at all occasions, haue suddenly risen vpon them thus disperfed and scattered out of array, and through presumption of safetie, vnadvisedly pursuing the chase, and haue incontinent changed the fortune of the whole battaile, and spite of their teethes wresting out of their hands the sure and vndoub-ted victory, being a little before conquered, haue for their part conquered the conquerers. It is hard to say whether they be craftier in laying an ambush, or wittier in auoyding the same. You would thinke they intend to flie, when

when they meane nothing lesse. And contrariwise, when they goe about that purpose, you would beleue it were the least part of their thought. For if they perceiue themselves ouermatched in number, or closed in too narrow a place, then they remooue their campe either in the night season with silence, or by some policie they deceiue their enemies, or in the day time they retire backe so softly, that it is no lesse ieopardie to meddle with them when they giue backe, then when they presse on. They fence and fortifie their campe surely with a deepe and a broad trench. The earth thereof is cast inward. Nor they do not set drudges and slaues a worke about it. It is done by the hands of the souldiers themselves. All the whole Armie worketh vpon it, except them that keep watch & ward in harnis before the trench for sodain aduentures. Therefore by the labour of so many, a large trench closing in a great compasse of ground, is made in lesse time then any man would beleue. Their Armour or harness which they Their Armor. weare, is sure and strong to receiue stroakes, and handsome for all moouings and gestures of the bodie, inso-much that it is not vnweildy to swimme in. For in the discipline of their warfare, among other feats they learne to swimme in harness. Their weapons be arrowes a-loofe, which they shoote both strongly and surely, not only footmen, but also horsemen. At hand stroakes they vsed not swords, but Pollaxes, which be mortall, as well in sharpenesse as in weight, both for soynes and downe stroakes. Engines for warre they deuise and inuent wondrous wittily. Which when they be made they keepe very secret, least if they should be knowne before neede require, they should be but laughed at, and serue to no purpose. But in making them, hereunto they haue chiefe respect, that they be both easie to be carried, and handsome to be moued, and turned about. Truce taken with their enemies for a short time, they doe so firmly and faithfully keepe, that they will not breake it, no, not though they be theretunto prouoked. They doe not waste nor destroy their enemies land with forragings, nor they burne not vp their Corne. Yea, they saue it as much as may be from being ouerrunne and troden downe, either with men or horses, thinking that it groweth for their owne vse and profit. They hurt no man that is vnarmed, vnlesse he be an Espyall. All Cities that be yeelded vnto them, they defend. And such as they winne by force of assault, they neither dispoyle nor sacke, but them that withstood and dissuaded the yeelding vp of the same, they put to death, the other souldiers they punish with bondage. All the weake multitude they leaue vntouched. If they know that any Citizens counselled to yeeld and render vp the Citie, to them they giue part of the condemned mens goods. The residue they distribute and giue freely among them, whose helpe they had in the same warre. For none of them selues taketh any portion of the pray. But when the battaile is finished and ended, they put their friends to neuer a penny cost of all the charges that they were at, but lay it vpon their neckes that be conquered. Them they burthen with the whole charge of their expenses, which they demand of them, partly in money, to be kept for like vse of battaile, and partly in lands of great reue-newes, to be paid vnto them yearely for euer. Such re-uenewes they haue now in many Countries. Which by little and little rising of diuers and sundry causes, be increased aboue seuen hundred thousand ducates by the year. Thither they send forth some of their Citizens as Lieutenants, to liue there sumptuously, like men of honour and renowne. And yet this notwithstanding, much money is saued, which commeth to the common treasury: vnlesse it so chance, that they had rather trust the Countrey with the money. Which many times they doe so long, vntill they haue neede to occupy it. And it seldome happeneth, that they demand all. Of these lands they assigne part vnto them, which at their request and exhortation, put themselues in such ieopardies, as I spake of before. If any Prince stir vp war against them, intending to inuade

Of Truces.

inuade their land, they meet him incontinent out of their owne borderers, with great power and strength. For they neuer lightly make warre in their owne Countrey. Nor they be neuer brought into so extreme necessitie, as to take help out of forraine lands into their owne Iland.

Of the Religions in Vtopia.

THere be diuers kinds of religion, not onely in sundry parts of the Iland but also in diuers places of euery citie. Some worship for God, the Sun: some the Moone: some, some other of the Planets. There bee that giue worship to a man that was once of excellent vertue or of famous glory, not onely as God, but also as the chiefest and highest God. But the most and the wisest part (reiecting all these) beleeeue, that there is a certaine godly power vnkowne, eueralasting, incomprehensible, inexplicable, farre aboue the capacitie and reach of mans wit, disperfed throughout al the world, not in bignesse, but in vertue and power. Him they call the father of all. To him alone they attribute the beginnings, the increasings, the proceedings, the changes, and the ends of all things. Neither they giue any diuine honours to any other then to him. Yea all the other also, though they be in diuers opinions, yet in this point they agree al together with the wisest sort, in beleeeuing that there is one principall God, the maker and ruler of the whole world: whom they al commonly in their country language call Mylbra. But in this they disagree, that among some he is counted one, & among some another. For euery one of them, whatsoeuer that is which he taketh for the chiefe god, thinketh it to be the very same nature, to whose only diuine might and maiestie, the sum and soueraigntie of all things by the consent of all people is attributed and giuen. Howbeit they all begin by little and little to forsake and fall from this varietie of superstitions, & to agree together in

Religious
houses.

in that religion which seemeth by reason to passe and excell the residue. And it is not to be doubted, but all the other would long agoe haue been abolished, but that what soeuer vnprosperous thing happened to any of them, as he was minded to change his religion, the fearefulnesse of people did take it, not as a thing comming by chance, but as sent from God out of heauen. As though the God, whose honour he was forsaking, would haue reuenged that wicked purpose against him. But after they heard vs speake of the name of Christ, of his doctrine, lawes, myracles, and of the no lesse wonderfull constancie of so many martyrs, whose blood willingly shed, brought a great number of nations throughout all parts of the world into their sect: you will not beleue with how glad minds, they agreed vnto the same: whether it were by the secret inspiration of God, or else for that they thought it mightest vnto that opinion, which among them is counted the chiefest. Howbeit I thinke this was no small helpe and furtherance in the matter, that they heard vs say, that Christ instituted among his, all things common: and that the same communitie doth yet remaine amongst the rightest Christian companies. Verely howsoeuer it came to passe, many of them consented together in our religion, and were washed in the holy water of Baptisme. But because among vs foure (for no moe of vs was left aliue, two of our company being dead) there was no Priest, which I am right sory for: they being entred and instructed in all other points of our religion, lacke only those sacraments, which none but Priests doe minister. Howbeit they vnderstand and perceiue them, and be very desirous of the same. Yea they reason and dispute the matter earnestly among themselues, whither without the sending of a Christian Bishop, one chosen out of their owne people, may receiue the order of priesthood. And truly they were minded to choosse one. But at my departure thence they had chosen none.

They also which doe not agree to Christs religion, feare

feare no man from it, nor speake against any man that hath receiued it. Sauing that one of our companie in my presence was sharply punished. He as soone as he was baptised, began against our wils with more earnest affection, then wisdom, to reason of Christs Religion: and began to waxe so hot in this matter, that he did not onely preferre our religion before all other, but also did vtterly despise and condemne all other, calling them prophane, and the followers of them wicked and deuilish, and the children of euerlasting damnation. When he had thus long reasoned the matter, they laid hold on him, accused him, and condemned him into exile, not as a dispiser of religion, but as a sedicious person, and a rayser vp of dissention among the people. For this is one of the auncientest lawes among them: that no man shall be blaimed for reasoning in the maintenance of his owne religion. For King Vtopus, euen at the first beginning, hearing that the inhabitants of the land were before his coming thither, at continuall dissention and strife among themselves for their religions: perceiuing also that this common dissention (whiles euery seuerall sect tooke seuerall parts in fighting for their Countrey) was the onely occasion of his conquest ouer them all, as soone as he had gotten the victorie. First of all, he made a decree, that it should be lawfull for euery man to fauour and follow what religion he would, and that he might doe the best he could to bring other to his opinion, so that he did it peaceably, gently, quietly, and soberly, without hastie and contentions rebuking and inueying against other. If he could not be faire and gentle speech induce them vnto his opinion, yet hee should vse no kind of violence, and refraine from displeasent and sedicious words. To him that would vehemently and feruently in this cause strife and contend, was decreede, banishment, or bondage. This law did King Vtopus make not onely for the maintenance of peace, which hee saw through continuall contentation & morral hatred vtterly extinguished.

R

Teacher of religion, who oblige the religion of others, punishing a hint to those who attempt to convert by violent means.

Sedicious re-soners punished.

No vile opinion to be con-ceiued of mans worthy nature.

shed: but also because he thought this decree should make for the furtherance of religion. Whereof he durst define and determine nothing vnaduisedly, as doubting whither God desiring manifold and diuers sorts of honour, would inspire sundrie men with sundry kinds of religion. And this surely he thought a very vnmeet and foolish thing, and a point of arrogant presumption, to compell all other by violence and threatnings to agree to the same, that thou beleeuest to be true. Furthermore, though there be one religion, which alone is true, and all other vaine and superstitious, yet did he well fore-see (so that the matter were handled with reason, and sober modestie) that the truth of the one power would at the last issue out and come to light. But if contention and debate in that behalfe should continually be vsed, as the worst men be most obstinate and stubborne, and in their euill opinion most constant: he perceiued that then the best and holiest religion would be troden vnder foot and destroyed by most vaine superstitions, euen as good corne is by thornes and weeds ouer-growne and choaked. Therefore all this matter he left vndiscussed, and gaue to euery man free libertie and choice to beleeue what he would. Sauing that he earnestly and straitly charged them, that no man should conceiue so vile and base an opinion of the dignitie of mans nature, as to thinke that the soules doe die and perish with the body: or that the world runneth at all aduentures, governed by no diuine prouidence. And therefore they beleeue that after this life vices be extreamely punished, and vertues bountifully rewarded. He that is of a contrary opinion, they count not in the number of men, as one that hath auailed the high nature of his soule, to the vilenesse of brute beasts bodies: much lesse in the number of their Citizens, whose lawes and ordinances, if it were not for feare, he would nothing at all esteeme. For you may be sure that he will study either with craft priuily to mocke, or else violently to breake the common lawes of his country, in whom remaineth no further feare then of the lawes, lawes, nor no further hope then of the body. Wherefore he that is thus minded is deprived of all honors, excluded from all offices, and reiect from all common administrati-Irreligious people secluded from all honours.

And thus he is of all sorts despised, as of an vnprofitable, and of a base and vile nature. Howbeit, they put him to no punishment, because they be perswaded, that it is in A verie strange saying.

no mans power to beleue what hee list. No, nor they constrain him not with threatnings to d'ssemble his minde, and shew countenance contrarie to his thought. For de-Deceit and falshood detected.

ceit and falshood, and all manner of lies, as next vnto fraud, they doe marueilously deiect and abhorre. But they suffer him not to dispute in his opinion, and that on-ly among the common people. For else apart among the priests and men of grauitie they doe not onely suffer, but also exhort him to dispute and argue, hoping that at the last, that madnesse will giue place to reason. There bee also other, and of them no small number, which be not bid-A marueilous strange opinion touching the soules of brute beasts.

den to speake their minds, as grounding their opinion vpon some reason, being in their liuing neither euill nor vicious. Their heresie is much contrary to the other. For they beleue that the soules of the brute beasts be immortal and euerlasting. But nothing to bee compared with others in dignitie, neither ordained and predestinate to like felicitie. For all they beleue certainly & surely that mans blisse shall be so great, that they doe mourne and lament euery mans sicknesse, but no mans death, vnlesse it be on whom they see depart from his life carefully, and against his will. For this they take for a very euill token, as though the soule being in dispaire, and vexed in conscience, through some priuie and secret forefeeling of the punishment now at hand, were afraide to depart. And they thinke hee shall not bee welcome to God, which when hee is called, runneth not to him gladly, but is drawne by force, & sore against his will. They therefore that see this kind of death, doe abhorre it, and them that so die, they bury with sorrow and silence. And when they
To die vnwillingly an euill token.

A willing and merry death not to be lamented.

haue prayed to God to be mercifull to the soule, and mercifull to pardon the infirmities thereof, they couer the dead corse with earth. Contrariwise, all that depart merrily and full of good hope, for then no man mourneth, but followeth the hearse with ioyfull singing, commending the soules to God with great affection. And at the last, not with mourning sorrow, but with a great reuerence they burne the bodies. And in the same place they set vp a pillar of stone, with the dead mens titles therein graued. When they be come home, they rehearse his vertuous manners and his good deeds. But no part of his life is so oft or gladly talked of, as his merie death. They thinke that this remembrance of the vertue and goodnes of the dead, doth vehemently prouoke & enforce the liuing to vertue. And that nothing can be more pleasant and acceptable to the dead. Whom they suppose to bee present among them, when they talke of them, though to the dull and feeble eyesight of mortall men they be inuisible. For it were an inconuenient thing, that the blessed should not be at libertie to goe whither they would. And it were a point of great vnkindnes in them, to haue vtterly cast away the desire of visiting & seeing their friends, to whom they were in their life time ioyned by mutuall loue & amitie. Which in good men after their death, they count to be rather increased then diminished. They beleeeue therefore that the dead be presently conuersant among the quicke, as beholders and witneses of all their words and deeds. Therefore they goe more couragiously to their businesse, as hauing a trust and assistance in such ouerseers. And this same beleefe of the present conuersation of their forefathers & ancestors among them, feareth them from all secret dishonestie. They vtterly despise and mocke southsayings & diuinations of things to come, by the flight and voyces of birds, and all other dizination of vaine superstition, which in other countries be in great obseruation. But they highly esteeme and worship miracles that come by no helpe of nature, as workes and witneses of the present power of God.

And

Southsayers not regarded nor credited.
Miracles.

And such they say doe chance there very often. And sometimes in great and doubtfull matters, by common intercession and prayers, they procure and obtaine them with a sure hope and confidence, and a stedfast beleefe.

They thinke that the contemplation of nature, and the praise thereof comming, is to God a very acceptable honour. Yet there be many so earnestly bent and affected to religion, that they passe nothing for learning, nor giue their minds to any knowledge of things. But idlenesse they vtterly forsake and eschew, thinking felicitie after this life to be gotten and obtained by busie labor & good exercises. Some therefore of them attend vpon the sick, some amend highwaies, cleanse ditches, repaire bridges, dig turfes, grauel, and stone, fell and cleaue wood, bring wood, corne, and other things, into the cities in carts, and serue not only in common workes, but also in priuate labours, as seruants: yea, more then bondmen. For whatsoeuer vnpleasant, hard and vile worke is any where, from the which labour, loathsomnesse, & desperation doth fray other, all that they take vpon them willingly and gladly, procuring rest and quiet to other, remaining in continuall worke and labor themselves, not embraiding others therewith. They neither reprove other mens liues, nor glory in their owne. These men the more seruiceable they behaue themselves, the more they be honoured of all men. Yet they be diuided into two sects. The one of them that liue single and chaste, abstaining not only from the company of women, but also from eating of flesh, and some of them from all maner of beasts. Which vtterly reiecting the pleasures of this present life as hurtfull, be all wholly set vpon the desire of the life to come, by watching, waiting, and sweating, hoping shortly to obtaine it, being in the meane season merry and lustie. The other sect is no lesse desirous of Labour, but they embrace matrimonie, not despising the solace thereof, thinking that they cannot be discharged of their bounden duties towards nature, without labour and toile, nor towards their natie countrey, without procreation of children.

The life contemplation.

The life active.

It is not all one to be wife and good.

Priests.

Excommunication.

children. They abstaine from no pleasure that doth nothing hinder them from labour. They loue the flesh of foure-footed beasts, because they beleue that by the meat they be made hardie and stronger to worke. The Vtopians count this sect the wiser, but the other the holier. Which in that they preferre single life before matrimony, and that sharpe life before the easier life, if herein they grounded vpon reason, they would mocke them. But now forasmuch as they say they be lead to it by religion, they honour and worship them. And these be they whom in their language by a peculiar name, they call Bruthecas, the which word by interpretation, signifieth to vs, men of religion, or religious men. They haue Priests of exceeding holinesse, and therefore very few. For there be but thirteene in euery Citie according to the number of their Churches, sauing when they goe forth to battell. For then seauen of them goe forth with the armie: in whose steedes so many new be made at home. But the other at their returne home againe, reenter euery one in his owne place: they that be aboue the number, vntil such time as they succede into the places of the other at their dying, be in the meane season continually in company with the Bishop. For he is the chiefe head of them all. They be chosen of the people, as the other Magistrates be by secret voices, for the auoiding of strife. After their election, they be consecrate of their owne companie. They be Ouerseers of all diuine matters, orderers of religions, and as it were Iudges and Masters of manners. And it is a great dishonestie and shame to be rebuked or spoken to by any of them, for dissolute and incontinent liuing. But as it is their office to giue good exhortations and counsell, so it is the dutie of the Prince and the other Magistrates, to correct and punish offenders, sauing that the Priests, whom they finde exceeding vicious liuers, them they excommunicate from hauing any interest in diuine matters. And there is almost no punishment among them more feared. For they runne in very great infamie, and be inwardly tormented mented with a secret feare of religion, and shall not long escape free with their bodies. For vnlesse they by quicke repentance approue the amendment of their liues to the Priests, they be taken and punished of the Councell, as wicked and irreligious. Both child-hood and youth is instructed and taught of them. Nor they be not more diligent to instruct them in learning, then in vertue and good manners. For they vse with very great endeuour and diligence to put into the heads of their children, whiles they be yee tender, and plyant, good opinions and profitable for the conseruation of the Weale publike. Which when they be once rooted in children, doe remaine with them all their life after, and be wondrous profitable for their defence and maintenance of the state of the Common-wealth: which neuer decaieeth but through vices rising of euill opinions. The Priests, vnlesse they be women (for that kind is not excluded from Priest-hood, howbeit few be chosen, and none but widdowes and olde women) the men Priests, I say, take to their wiues the chiefeft women in all their Countrey. For to no office among the Vtopians is there more honour and preheminence giuen. Infomuch that if they commit any offence, they be vnder no common iudgement, but be left only to God and themselves. For they thinke it not lawfull to touch him with mans hand, be he neuer so vicious, which after so singular a sort was dedicate and consecrate to God, as a holy offering. This maner may they easily obserue, because they haue so few Priests, and doe choose them with such circumspection. For it scarcely euer chanceth, that the most vertuous among vertuous, which in respect only of his vertue is aduanced to so high a dignitie, can fall to vice and wickednesse. And if it should chance indeed (as mans nature is mutable and fraile) yet by reason they be so few, and promoted to no might nor power, but only to honour it were not to be feared that any great dammage by them should happen and ensue to the Common-wealth. They haue so rare and few Priests, least if the honour

The Maiestie
and preheminence of Priests.

were were communicated to many, the dignitie of the order, which among them now is so highly esteemed, should run in contempt. Specially because they thinke it hard to find many so good, as to be meete for that dignitie, to the execution and discharge whereof it is not sufficient to be indued with meane vertues. Furthermore these Priests be not more esteemed of their owne countrey men, then they be of forreigne and strange Countries. Which thing may hereby plainly appeare. And I thinke also that this is the cause of it. For whiles the armies be fighting together in open field, they a little beside not far off kneele vpon their knees in their hallowed vestiments, holding vp their hands to heauen : praying first of all for peace, next for victory of their owne part, but to neither part a bloudie victorie. If their host get the vpper hand, they runne into the maine battaile, and restraints their owne men from sleying and cruelly pursuing their vanquished enemies. Which enemies, if they do but see them and speake to them, it is inough for the safe-guard of their liues. And the touching of their cloathes defendeth and saueth all their goods from rauine and spoile. This thing hath aduanced them to so great worship and true maiestie among all nations, that many times they haue as well preserved their owne citizens from the cruell force of their enemies, as they haue their enemies from the furious rage of their owne men. For it is well knowen, that when their owne armie hath recoiled, and in despaire turned backe, and run away, their enemies fiercely pursuing with slaughter and spoile, then the Priests comming betweene haue staied the murder, and parted both the hoasts. So that peace hath beene made and concluded betweene both parts vpon equall and indifferent conditions. For there was neuer any nation, so fierce, so cruell, and rude, but they had them in such reuerence, that they counted their bodies hallowed and sanctified, and therefore not to be violently and vnreuerently touched. They keepe holy the first and last day of every Moneth and yeare, diuiding the yeare

The obseruation of holydaies among the Vtopians.

yeare into Moneths, which they measure by the course of the Moone, as they doe the yeare by the course of the Sunne. The first daies they call in their language Cine-mernes, and the last Tapermernes, the which words may be interpreted, Primifest and Finifest, or else in our speech, first feast and last feast. Their Churches be very gorgious, not only of fine and curious workmanship, but also (which in the fewnesse of them was necessarie) very wide and large, and able to receiue a great company of people. But they be all somewhat darke. Howbeit that was not done through ignorance in building, but as they say, by the counsell of the Priests. Because they thought that ouermuch light doth disperse mens cogitations, whereas in dimme and doubtfull light they be gathered together, and more earnestly fixed vpon religion and deuotion: which because it is not there of one sort among all men, and yet all the kinds and fashions of it, though they be sundrie and manifold, agree together in the honour of diuine nature, as going diuers waies to one ende: therefore nothing is seene nor heard in the Churches, but that seemeth to agree indifferently with them all. If there be a distinct kind of sacrifice peculiar to any seuerall sect, that they execute at home in their owne houses. The common sacrifices be so ordered, that they be no derogation, nor preiud-ice to any of the priuate sacrifices and religions. Therefore no Image of any God is seene in the Church, to the intent it may be free for every man to conceive God by their religion after what likenesse and similitude they will. They call vpon no peculiar name of God, but only Mythra. In the which word they all agree together in one nature of the diuine Maiestie whatsoeuer it be. No prayers be vsed but such as euery man may boldly pronounce without the offending of any sect. They come therefore to the Church, the last day of euery mo-neth and yeare in the euening yet fasting, there to giue thanks to God for that they haue prosperously passed ouer the yeare or moneth, whereof that holy day is

Their Churches.

Churches of a dimme light, and a reason why.

holly churches about but a dim light

the last day. The next day they come to the Church early in the morning, to pray to God that they may haue good fortune and successe all the new yeare or moneth; which they doe vse to begin of that same holy day. But in the holy daies that be the last daies of the moneths and yeares, before they come to the Church, the wiues fall downe prostrate before their husbands feet at home; and the children before the feete of their parents, confessing and acknowledging themselues offenders either by some actual deed, or by commission of their duty, and desire pardon for their offence. Thus if any cloude of priuie displeasure was risen at home, by this satisfaction it is ouer-blowne, that they may be present at the sacrifices with pure and charitable minds. For they be afraid to come there with troubled consciences. Therefore if they know themselves to beare any hatred or grudge towards any man, they presume not to come to the sacrifices, before they haue reconciled themselves and purged their consciences, for feare of great vengeance and punishment for their offence. When they be come thither, the men goe in to the right side of the Church, and the women into the left side. There they place themselves in such order, that all they which be of the male-kind in euery household, sit before the good man of the house; and they of the female-kind before the good wife. Thus it is fore-seene, that all their gestures and behauiours be marked and obserued abroad of them, by whose authoritie and discipline they be gouerned at home. This also they diligently seeke vnto, that the yonger euermore be coupled with his elder, least children being ioyned together, they should passe ouer the time in childish wantonnesse, wherein they ought principally to conceiue a religious and deuout feare towards God: which is the chiefe and almost the only incitation to vertue. They kill no liuing beast in sacrifice, nor they take not that the mercifull clemencie of God doth dwell in blood and slaughter, which hath giuen life to beasts to the intent they should liue. They burne frankensence, and other

An order for place in the Church,

Ceremonies.

other sweet fauours, and light also a great number of wax candles and tapers, not supposing this geere to be any thing auailable to the diuine nature, as neither the prayers of men. But this vnhurtfull and harmlesse kind of worship pleaseth them. And by these sweet fauours and lights, and other such ceremonies men feelee themselues secretly lifted vp, and encouraged to deuotion with more willing and feruent hearts. The people weareth in the Church white apparell. The Priest is cloathed in chaungeable colours, which in workmanship be excellent, but in stuffe not very precious. For their vestments be neither embroidered with gold, nor set with precious stones. But they be wrought so finely and cunningly, with diuers feathers of fowles, that the estimation of no earthly stuffe is able to counteruaile the price of the worke. Furthermore, in these birds feathers, and in the due order of them, which is obserued in their setting, they say, is contained certaine diuine misteries. The interpretation whereof knowne, which is diligently taught by the Priests, they be put in remembrance of the bountifull benefits of God toward them; and of the loue and honour which of their behalfe is due to God: and also of their duties one toward another. When the Priest first commeth out of the Vestry thus apparelled, they fall downe incontinent euery one reuerently to the ground, with so still silence, that the very fashion of the thing striketh into them a certaine feare of God, as though he were there personally present. When they haue lien a little space on the ground, the Priest giueth them a signe to rise. Then they sing praises vnto God, which they intermixt with instruments of musicke, for the most part of other fashions then these that we vse in this part of the world. And like as some of ours be much sweeter then theirs, so some of theirs doe farre passe ours. But in one thing doubtlesse they goe exceeding farre beyonde vs. For all their musicke both that they play vpon instruments, and that they sing with mans voice, doth so resemble and expresse naturall affections, the sound and tune

Their Church
Musicke.

Church musicke as compared by wittnes with.

Prayers.

is so applied and made agreeable to the thing, that whether it be a prayer, or else a dutie of gladnesse, of patience, of trouble, of mourning, or of anger: the fashion of the melodie doth so represent the meaning of the thing, that it doth wonderfully moue, stirre, pearce, and enflame the hearers minds. At the last, the people and the Priest together, rehearse solemne prayers in words, expressely pronounced, so made, that euery man may priuately apply to himselfe that which is commonly spoken of all. In these prayers euery man recogniseth, and knowledgeth God to be his maker, his gouernour, and the principall cause of all other goodnesse, thanking him for so many benefits receiued at his hand. But namely that through the fauour of God he hath chanced into that publike weale, which is most happy and wealthie, and hath chosen that religion which he hopeth to be most true. In the which thing if he doe any thing erre, or if there be any other better then either of them is, being more acceptable to God, he desireth him that he will of his goodnes let him haue knowledge thereof, as one that is readie to follow what way soeuer he will leade him. But if this forme and fashion of a Common-wealth be best, and his owne Religion most true and perfect, then he desireth God to giue him a constant stedfastnesse in the same, and to bring all other people to the same order of liuing, and to the same opinion of God, vnlesse there be any thing that in this diuersitie of Religions doth delight his vnsearchable pleasure. To bee short, he prayeth him that after his death hee may come to him. But how soone or late that he dare not assigne nor determine. Howbeit, if it might stand with his Maiesties pleasure, hee would bee much gladder to die a painefull death and so to goe to God, then by long liuing in worldly prosperitie to bee away from him. When this prayer is said, they fall downe to the ground againe and a little after they rise vp and go to dinner. And the residue of the day they passe ouer in playes, and exercise of chitallrie. Now I haue declared and described vnto you you as truely as I could the forme and order of that Common-wealth, which verily in my iudgement is not onely the best, but also that which alone of good right may claime and take vpon it the name of a common-wealth or publike weale. For in other places they speake still of the common-wealth. But euery man procureth his owne priuate gaine. Heere where nothing is priuate, the common affaires be earnestly looked vpon. And truely on both parts they haue good cause so to doe as they doe. For in other countries who knoweth not that hee shall starue for hunger, vnlesse he make some seuerall prouision for himselfe, though the Common-wealth flourish neuer so much in riches? And therefore hee is compelled euen of very necessitie to haue regarde to himselfe, rather then to the people, that is to say, to others. Contrariwise, there where all things bee common to euery man, it is not to be doubted that any man shall lacke any thing necessary for his priuate vses, so that the common store houses and barnes bee sufficiently stored. For there nothing is distributed after a niggish sort, neither there is any poore man or begger. And though no man haue any thing, yet euery man is rich. For what can be more rich, then to liue ioyfull and merily, without all grieve and penfullnesse: Not caring for his owne liuing, nor vexed or troubled with his wifes importunate complaints, nor dreading pouertie to his sonne, nor sorrowfull for his daughters dowrie. Yea they take no care at all for the liuing and wealth of themselues and all theirs, and their wiues, their children, their nephewes, their childrens children, and all the succession that euer shall followe in their posteritie. And yet besides this, there is no lesse prouision for them that were once labourers, and be now weake and impotent, then for them that doe now labour and take paine. Heere now would I see, If any man dare be so bolde as to compare with the equity, the iustice of other Nations. Among whom, I forsake God, if I can finde any signe or token of equitie and iustice. For what iustice is this, that a rich Gold-smith, or an vsurer, or to bee short, any of them, which either doe nothing at all, or else that which they doe is such, that it is not very necessary to the Common wealth, should haue a pleasant and a wealthie liuing, either by idlenesse, or by vnecessary businesse: When in the meane time poore labourers, carters, iron-smithes, carpenters, and ploughmen, by so great and continuall toyle, as drawing and bearing beasts be scant able to sustaine, and againe so necessary toyle, that without it no common wealth were able to continue and endure one yeere, should yet get so hard and poore a liuing, and liue so wretched and miserable a life, that the state and condition of the labouring beast may seeme much better and welthier? For they bee not put to so continuall labour, nor thier liuing is not much worse: yea, to them much pleasanter, taking no thought in the meane season for the time to come. But these sillie poore wretches bee presently tormented with barraine and vnfruitfull labour. And the remembrance of their poore indigent and beggerly olde age killeth them vp. For their dayly wages is so little, that it will not suffice for the same day, much lesse it yeeldeth any ouerplus, that may daily bee laide vp for the releefe of olde age. Is not this an vniust, and an vnkinde publique weale, which giueth great fees and rewards to gentlemen, as they call them, and to gold-smithes, and to such other, which bee either idle persons, or else onely flatterers, and deuisers of vaine pleasures: And of the contrarie part, maketh no gentle prouision for poore plowmen, colliers, labourers, iron-smithes, and carpenters: without whom no common wealth can continue? But after it hath abused the labourers of their lustie and flowring age, at the last when they bee oppressed with olde age and sickenesse, being needie, poore, and indigent of all things, then forgetting their so many painefull watchings, not remembering their so many and so great benefits, recompenseth and and acquainteth them most vnkindly, with miserable death. And yet besides this, the rich men not onely by priuate fraud, but also by common lawes, doe euery day pluck and snatch away from the poore, some part of their daily liuing. So whereas it seemed before vniust to repentance with vnkindnesse their paines, that they haue beene beneficiall to the common-weale, now they haue to their wrong and vniust dealing (which is yet a much worse poynt) giuen the name of iustice, yea, and that by force of a law. Therefore when I consider and weigh in my minde all these common-wealths, which now a daies any where doe flourish, so God helpe mee, I can perceiue nothing but a certaine conspiracy of rich men procuring their owne commodities, vnder the name and title of the common-wealth. They inuent and deuise all meanes and crafts, first how to keepe safely without feare of loosing, that they haue vniustly gathered together: and next how to hire and abuse the worke and labor of the poore for as little money as may be. These deuises when the rich men haue decreed to be kept and obserued vnder colour of the communitie, that is to say, also of the poore people, then they be made lawes. But these most vicious and wicked men, when they haue by their vnfatiable couetousnesse deuided among themselves all those things, which would haue sufficed all men, yet how farre bee they from the wealth and felicitie of the Vtopian Common-wealth?

Out of the which, in that all the desire of money with the vse thereof is vtterly seclused and banished, how great a heape of cares is cut away? How great an occasion of wickednes and mischief is pulled vp by the roote? For who knoweth not that fraud, theft, rauine, brauling, quarrelling, brabbling, strife, chiding, contention, murder, treason, poisoning, which by dayly punishments are rather reuenged then refrained, doe die when money dyeth? And also that feare, griefe, care, labours, and watching, doe perish euen the verie same moment that money perisheth? Yet pouertie it selfe, which onely seemed to lacke

Contempt of money.

lacke money, if money were gone, it also would decrease and vanish away. And that you may perceiue this more plainly, consider with your selues some barren and vnfruitfull yeare, wherein many thousands of people haue starued for hunger : I dare be bold to say, that in the end of that penury so much corne or graine might haue beene found in rich mens barnes, if they had beene searched, as being diuided among them whom famine and pestilence then consumed, no man at all should haue felt that plague and penury. So easily might men get their liuing, if that same worthy Princeesse ladie money did not alone stoppe vp the way betweene vs and our liuing, which a Gods name was very excellently deuised and inuented, that by her the way thereto should be opened. I am sure the rich men perceiue this, nor they be not ignorant how much better it were to lacke no necessarie thing, then to abound with ouermuch superfluitie : to be rid out of innumerable cares and troubles, then to be besieged and encombred with great riches. And I doubt not that either the respect of every mans priuate commoditie, or else the

A meruailous authoritie of our Sauour Christ (which for his great saying. wisdome could not but know what were best, and for his inestimable goodnesse could not but counsell to that which he knew to the best) would haue brought all the world long agoe into the lawes of this Weale publike, if it were not the one only best : the princeesse and mother of all mischiefe Pride, doth with-stand and let it. She measureth not wealth and prosperitie by her owne commodities, but by the miserie and incommodities of other : she would not by her good will be made a goddesse, if there were no wretches left, ouer whom she might like a scornfull Lady rule and triumph, ouer whose miseries her felicities might shine, whose pouertie she might vexe, torment and encrease, by rigorously setting forth her riches. This hel-hound creepeth into mens hearts, and pulleth them backe from entring the right path of life, and is so deeply rooted in mens breasts, that she cannot be pulled out.

A meruailous saying.

Pride.

out. This forme and fashion of a Weale publike, which I would gladly wish vnto all Nations, I am glad yet that it chanced to the Vtopians, which haue followed those institutions of life, whereby they haue laid such foundations of their Common-wealth, as shall continue and last not only wealthy, but also as farre as mans wit may iudge and coniecture, shall endure for euer. For, seeing the chiefe causes of ambition and sedition, with other vices, be plucked vp by the roots, and abandoned at home, there can be no ieopardie of domesticall dissention, which alone hath cast vnderfoot and brought to nought the wel-fortified and strongly defenced wealth and riches of many Cities. But for as much as perfect concord remaineth, and wholsome lawes be executed at home, the enuie of all forreine Princes be not able to shake or mooue the Empire, though they haue many times long agoe gone about to do it, being euermore driuen backe. Thus when Raphael had made an end of his tale, though many things came to my minde, which in the maners and lawes of that people, seemed to be instituted and founded of no good reason, but only in the fashion of their chiuallric, and in their sacrifices and religions, and in other of their lawes, but also, yea and chiefly, in that which is the principall foundation of all their ordinances: that is to say, in the communitie of their life and liuing, without any occupying of money, by the which thing only all nobility, magnificence, worship, honour, and maiestie, the true ornaments and honours, as the common opinion is, of a Common-wealth, vtterly be ouerthrowne and destroyed: yet because I knew that he was weary of talking, and was not sure whether he could abide that any thing should be said against his mind: specially remembring that he had reprehended this fault in other, which be afraid least they should seeme not to be wise enough, vnles they could finde some fault in other mens inuentions: therefore I praising both their institutions and his communication, tooke him by the hand, and led him into supper, saying that we would choose another time to weigh and examine the same matters, and to talke with him more at large therein. Which would God it might once come to passe. In the meane time, as I cannot agree and consent to all things that he said, being else without doubt a man singularly well learned, and also in all worldly matter exactly and profoundly experienced : so must I needs confesse and grant, that many things be in the Vtopian Weale publike, which in our Cities I may rather wish for, then hope after.

T

choose

Thus endeth the afternoones talke of Raphael Hythloday, concerning the Lawes and Institutions of the Iland of Vtopia.

FINIS.

The Epitile.

To the Right Honourable HIEROME BUSLYDE, prouost of Arienum, and Counsellor of the Catholike King CHARLES, Peter Giles Citizen of Antwerpe, wisheth health and felicitie.

Thomas Moore the singular ornament of this our age, as you your selfe (right honourable Buslyde) can wit-nesse, to Whom he is perfectly well knowne, sent unto me this other day, the Iland of Vtopia, to very few as yet knowne, but most worthy, which as far excellen Plato's Common-wealth, all people should be willing to know: specially of a man most eloquent so finely set forth, so cunningly painted out, and so evidently subiect to the eye, that as oft as I read it, me thinketh that I see somewhat more, then when I heard Ra-phael Hythloday himselfe (for I was present at that talke as well as Master Moore) uttering and pronouncing his owne words: yea, though the same man, according to his pure eloquence, did so open and declare the matter, that he might plainly enough appeare, to report not things, which he had learned of others only by hearesay, but which he had with his owne eyes presently seene, and thorowly viewed, and wherein he had no small time bene conuersant and abiding: a man truly in mine opinion, as touching the knowledge of Religions, peoples, and worldly experience, much passing. yea euen the very famous and renowned traeller Vliesses: and indeed such a one, as for the space of these 800 yeares past, I thinke nature into the world brought not forth his like: in comparison of Whom, Ve-spuce may be thought to haue seen nothing. Moreouer, whereas we be wont more effectually and pitifully to declare and expresse things that we haue seene, then which we haue but only heard: there was besides that in this man, a certaine peculiar grace, and singular dexteritie to discerne and set forth a matter withall. Yet the selfe-same things as oft as I behold and consider them drawne and painted out with Master Moores pensill, I am therewith so mooued, so delighted, so inflamed, and so apt, that sometime me think I am presently conuersant, euen in the Iland of Vtopia. And I promise you, I can scant believe

The Epistle.

beleene that Raphael himselfe by all that fine yeares space that he was in Vtopia abiding, saw there so much, as heere in master Moores discription is to bee seene and perceived. Which discription, With so many wondrous, and miraculous things is replenished, that I stand in great doubt, whereat first and chiefly to muse or meruaile: whether at the excellencie of his perfect and sure memorie, which could welnigh word by word rehearse so many things onely heard: or else at his singular prudence, who so well and Wittily marked and bare away all the originall causes & fountaines (to the vulgar people commonly most unknowne) wherof both issueth & springeth the mortal confusion and utter decay of a common wealth, and also the auancement & wealthy state of the same may rise and grow: or else at the efficacie & pith of his words, which in so fine a latin stile, with such force of eloquence hath conched together and comprised so many & diuers matters, specially being a man continually incombred with so many busie & troublesome cares, both publique, & priuat, as he is. Howbeit, al these things cause you litle to marueile (right honorable Bullid) for that you are familiarly and thoroughly acquainted with the notable, yea almost diuine wit of the man. But now to proceede to other matters, I surely know nothing needful or requisit to be adioyned vnto his writings: Only a meter of foure verses Written in the Vtopian tongue, Which after master Moores departure, Hythloday by chance shewed me: that I haue caused to be added thereto, With the Alphabet of the same nation, and haue also garnished the margeant of the booke with certaine notes. For as touching the situation of the Island, that is to say, in what part of the World Vtopia standeth, the ignorance & lacke wherof not a litle troubleth and greeneth master Moore, in deed Raphael left not that vnspoken off: Howbeit with verie few words he lightly touched it, incidently by the way passing it ouer, as meaning of likelyhood to keepe and reserve that to another place. And the same, I wot not how, by a certaine euil and unluckie chance escaped vs both. For when Raphael was speaking therof, one of master Moores seruants came to him, & whispered in his eare. Wherfore I being then of purpose pose more earnestly additt to heare, one of the company, by reason of cold taken, & think, a ship bord, couched out so loude, that he tooke from my hearing certain of his words. But I wil neuer stint, nor rest, until I haue got the full & exact knowledge hereof: inasmuch that I will be able perfectly to instruct you, not onely in the longitude or true meridian of the Island, but also in the iust latitude thereof: that is to say, in the subleuation or height of the pole in that Region, if our friend, Hythloday be in safety and aliuie. For we heare very vncertaine newes of him. Some report, that he died in his iourney homeward. Some againe affirme, th,at he returned into his country, but partly, for that he could not away with the fashions of his country folke, and partly for that his minde and affection was altogether set and fixed vpon Vtopia: they say that he hath taken his voyage thitherward againe. Now as touching this, that the name of this Island is no where found among the old and ancient cosmographers, this doubt Hythloday himselfe very wel dissolued. For why, it is possible inough (quoth he) that the name, which it had in oldt tme, was after ward changed, or else that they neuer had knowledge of this Island: forasmuch as now in our time diuers lands be found, which to the old Geographers were vknowne. Howbeit, what needeth it in this behalfe to fortifie the matter with arguments, seeing Master Moore is author hereof sufficient? But whereas he doubteth of the edition or imprinting of the booke, indeed herein I both comment, & also acknowledge the mans modesty. Howbeit, vnto mee it seemeth a worke most unworthy to be long suppressed, and most worthy to go abroad into the hands of men: yea, & vnder the title of your name, to be published to the world, either because the singular endowments and qualities of master Moore be to no man better knowne then to you: or else because no man is more fit and meete then you, with good counsels to further, & aduance the common-wealth, wherein y^e haue many yeeres already continued and trauelled with great glory and commendations, both for Wisdome and knowledge, and also of integritie and vprightnesse. Thus a liberall supporter of good learning, and floure of this our time, I bid you most heartily Well to fare,

The Epistle.

A meter of foure verses in the Vtopian tongue, · briefly touching as well the strange beginning, as · also the happie and wealthie continuance · of the same Common-wealth.

VTopus ha Boccas peula chama polta chamaan.
Bargol he maglami Baccan soma gimnosophaon Agrama gymnosophaon labarem bacha bodamilomin.
Voluala barchin heman la lauoluala aramme pagloni.

Which Verses the Translator, according to his simple knowledge, and meane vnderstanding in the Vtopian tongue, hath thus rudely englished.

MY King and conquerour Vtopus by name, A Prince of much renowme and immortall fame, Hath made me an Ile that erst no Island was, Full fraught with worldly wealth, with pleasure & sollace.
I one of all other without Philosophie, Haue shaped for man a Philosophicall Citie.
As mine, I am nothing dangerous to impart, So better to receiue, I am readie with all my heart.

A short meter of Vtopia, written by Anemolius Poet Laureat, and nephew to Hyrbloday by his sister.

ME Vtopie cleped Antiquitie, Voide of haunt and harbrough.
Now am I like to Plato's Citie, Whose fame flyeth the World through.
Yea like, or rather more likely,
Plato's platte to excell and passe,
For what Plato's penné hath platted briefly, In naked words, as in a glasse, The same haue I performed fully,
With lawes, with men, and treasure fitly.
Wherefore not Vtopie, but rather rightly My name is Entopie: A place of felicitie.

Gerard

Gerard Noniomage of Vtopia.

DOth pleasure please? then place thee here, and well thee rest,

Most pleasant pleasures thou shall finde here, Doth profit ease? then here arriue, this Ile is best.

For passing profits doe here appeare.

Doth both thee tempt, and wouldest thou gripe both gaine and pleasure?

This Ile is fraught with both bounteously.

To still thy greedy intent, reape here incomparable treasure.

Both minde and tongue to garnish richly.

The hid Wells and Fountaines both of vice and vertue, Thou hast them here subiect vnto thine eye.

Bethankfull now, and thanks where thanks be due;

Giueo Thomas Moore Londons immortall glory.

Cornelius Graphey to the Reader.

VVilt thou know what wonders strange be in the land that late was found?

Wilt thou learne thy life to lead, by diuers waies that godly be?

Wilt thou of vertue and of vice, vnderstand the very ground?

Wilt thou see this wretched world how full it is of va-nitie?

Then reade, and marke, and beare in minde, for thy be-hoofe as thou may best:

All things that in this present worke, that worthy clarke fir Thomas Moore,

With wit diuine full lea. edly, vnto the world hath plainly exprest:

In whom London well glory may, for wisedome and for godly lore.

